SUMMER'S ADVENT.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

BY E. NORMAN GUNNISON.

So fair, so fleet, the Summer's feet
Come flying on as Winter closes;
Ere dies away the stormy day,
The land is radiant with roses;
And Summer's breath awakes from death
The flowers which 'neath the earth have slumbered,
The land and sea once more are free
From fetters which in Winter cumbered.

All Nature smiles, and soft beguiles
Our hearts from out their lonely hours,
And sweet the breath of tropic isles
Sweeps down from sunny seas, where smiles
Eternal Summer, robed in flowers.
In thy hot swoon, delicious June,
Our senses lie enthralled and dreaming,
And all too soon the waning moon
Shall wake us from thy happy seeming.

O moments sweet! with glancing feet,
Whose coming we in Winter waited,
Ye recompense the drowsy sense,
The yearning heat, desire intense,
In thy full coming, happy, fated.
We hearts which wait, though desolate
With Winter's gloom and Wintry weather,
The Winter past, with stormy blast,
Shall find their bark of being cast
Where Summers bud and bloom forever.

CHAPTER VIII—CONTINUED.

Miss Falconcourt was troubled and unhappy, and Eva was dull. She would run down to Merton Villa now and then to see Mrs. Brierley, and every time she found Stephen Plummer doing up the garden or improving the house in some way or the other, and Eva wondered.

"My love," said Mrs. Brierley on the last occasion, "you must be kind to Stephen."

"I, dear! for why?"

"Because he will very shortly be my husband," was the grave response, "and the master of the house."

It is almost impossible to conceive the acute pain Evelyn experienced when Mrs. Brierley made the startling announcement that Mr. Stephen Plummer would shortly be master of Merton Villa. Many persons in the course of their lives feel a sudden presentiment that certain incidents will be the cause of good or bad effect. Such a presentiment came upon Eva now—came like a breath of ill omen, and she inwardly shuddered.

"But, my dear Mrs. Brierley," she said, "if you have made up your mind to this step ——"

"If I have?" interrupted Mrs. Brierley. "Eva, my love, if I had not, I should not mention it to you."

"But I am sure there must be some strange cause for this. Oh, had I but dreamt of such a thing occurring through me, I would never, never, have left your home."

"Nonsense, child; I cannot avoid my fate. Do you suppose that that man has survived the hardships that he has endured since his boyhood, survived wreck and disaster, war and famine, for nothing? No, he is my fate—he was to belong to me, and he has come back at last. Come what may, peace or war, weal or woe, henceforth our destinies will be bound up together."

Eva knew too well that when Mrs. Brierley spoke in this tone of decision you might just as well attempt to stop a train by putting up an iron gate as to try and turn aside her resolve by any sort of reasoning. She had decided, she had reasoned and resolved, and that was enough.

"But surely, dear, you will take measures to protect your property against him. This fee?" Eva said coaxingly.

Mrs. Brierley opened her eyes very wide, and strode bravely across the room; she was angered, and perhaps pained too.

"Eva, my child," she said, and her voice was stern and placid, "when I married Brierley I did not protect my property against him. I trusted him with myself; I gave him my love in pure faith. I cannot love this man, or I would. My time is gone by for that, though older hearts than mine yearn for the companionship of the other sex; yet love is not yet dead, and love only superseded by the more lasting and matter-of-fact respect. It is respect that breeds happiness between people, Eva. Love and kisses belong to youth, when impulse usurps the place of reason, and life seems to be as smooth as a Summer stream. Not so with me; I want comfort and a quiet companion in my home. I have found one, or Providence has found one for me, and I would sooner shut my door upon him now than take him in doubt. If I cannot trust my poor property in his hands, I cannot trust myself to his keeping. No, Eva, he took me as I am—what is mine shall be his, and may he deal justly by me!"

Eva sighed. How sadly unhappy she was at this moment!

"You must not overlook the fact, Eva, my child, that I am not likely at my age to see Mr. Plummer in the same light as you do; and then again you should remember that while you are out mixing in good society, and with the prospect of a very favorable marriage, I am living a life of solitude without a soul save the charwoman to speak to."

This came like a reproach to Eva, and she felt it.

"Forgive me," she said tearfully, "if I have made you angry; I am thoughtless and—and perhaps jealous of you, dear, jealous of anyone else taking my place here."

"That they can never do, Eva. Your home will remain as it is, and the house shall always be a home for you; not even Plummer shall stand between you and me any more than even you, my child, shall stand between him and me."

"I never will, dear."

"Enough is said about it, my love. I am too old to be dictated to now, and what is done can't be undone, and, if it could, I might not feel disposed to undo it."

She kissed Eva very fondly as she finished this last sentence, and Eva threw her arms round her neck and kissed her again and again. Come what may, it seemed that no power on earth could kill their love for each other.

"I shall expect you to come to the wedding," Mrs. Brierley said with a forced smile.

"I shall only be too happy, dear," answered Eva, who in that moment had made up her mind to even be a party to the affair, for the mere purpose of making the dear, good soul, who had been all a mother to her, pleased and happy, "and you will let me know the date, will you?"

"My pet, all in good time," answered Mrs. Brierley. There was a twinkle in her eyes and a flush on her face now. She was grateful to Eva for seeming to take an interest in her; so when they parted on this occasion both were happier than they had been since Mr. Stephen Plummer had set his foot within the threshold.

Away from Merton Villa, however, Eva's happiness soon faded, and she became pale and dull. She could not reconcile herself to the intended marriage, though her judgment clearly pointed out the necessity of her giving way to Mrs. Brierley, at least with good grace, though it is possible she would go so far as to assume an interest in the pending union that she did not and never could feel.

Miss Falconcourt noticed the change in Eva at once, and wished to know the cause, naturally enough, and Eva told her of all that had happened since she left the old home.

"Well, dear, was Miss Falconcourt's response, "and what is there in this to make you unhappy? Surely your guardian can marry without it making any material difference to you. Poor thing! she must be lonely enough, poked up down there all alone."

Eva was of the same opinion, she said, but simply objected to the man whom her guardian intended to marry.

"He is rough and strange, and I don't like him."

"My dear Eva, can you expect that your father's housekeeper would marry a gentleman? This person is strange, you may think. People don't expect to give and have the same opinions of such persons as this Plummer as our elders would. It is silly, dear, for you to make yourself unhappy about so simple an every-day occurrence."

Evelyn began to think so too. Miss Falconcourt's thorough matter-of-fact way of getting at the point of anything was of great service to Eva, who, under the influence of her almost solitary life, was sentimental, if not romantic.

"My dear child," said Miss Falconcourt, who was very womanly and sensible since her father's serious illness, "I should so like to see you have a little more spirits. You are too thoughtful. All your life seems to be concentrated into one dot of the obscure future, a dot that your mind's eye and imagination dwell upon. You may rely, my dear, that no man is worth a moment's anxiety, and that, but, the future, though your fondest hopes may be fulfilled, will fail to bring you any. By-the-bye, Eva, I hear from papa, who was able to speak to me this morning a little, that Hope has been rummaging amongst some correspondence of his college days, and says that he knew something of your people. He is himself a distant relation of the De Veres of Warwickshire. I think he wants to speak to you on the subject."

Poor Eva blushed a little. She knew nothing of the De Veres of Warwickshire. How should she? She knew so little of any De Veres at all, and she said but small attention to the mere coincidence of names. There is not a single name amongst the aristocracy of all England that has not its fac-simile amongst the shopkeepers, petty masters or workmen; not only aristocratic names, but those of our great men of genius. Nelson is frequently seen in London. I once saw an R. Wellington a dairyman' Napier a bear-house keeper, Cromwell a bootmaker; and if one were to take the trouble to look, every other name great in history, politics, genius or social power would be found nearly always belonging to the most unworthy of persons.

Miss Falconcourt was aware of this too, but she could see that Eva was a lady by birth as well as by instinct, and, being very much interested in her welfare, she wished to find out something of her parentage and so forth, and was anxious that Mr. Hope should see if he could trace any relationship between her and the De Veres of Warwickshire.

When Mr. Falconcourt was asleep in the afternoon, and Mr. Hope at liberty for a time, Miss Falconcourt purposely brought him and Eva together.

"Mr. Hope," she said, "do come and read to us Tennyson's last poem. You did promise, you know."

"With much pleasure, Miss Falconcourt," was the ready answer. But when he was comfortably seated with the young ladies in Miss Falconcourt's boudoir, the poem was for a time set aside, and a conversation entered into which Marian adroitly brought to a climax by saying quietly:

"Mr. Hope, I have been telling Miss De Vere of what papa told me—that is, he said something about your having found some old letters which you think would establish a sort of friendship between you and Miss De Vere on the strength of a previous knowledge of her family."

"Well, not exactly that, pardon me; that is, I should be proud of the honor of forming a friendship with Miss De Vere, but would be sorry to use the means accidentally thrown in my way to force myself upon her kindly notice. I have been looking over the letters again, and will with pleasure read them to you, if Miss De Vere would care to hear them."

"Oh, I am positive she would. You need not say who they came from."

"Are you connected with the De Veres of Warwickshire?" Mr. Hope asked of Eva.

"No. I know nothing of my family history, Mr. Hope. I never knew my family."

"Your father was James De Vere, was he not?"

"Yes; James Emanuel."

"They are the names correctly enough, Miss De Vere. He married a Miss Jessie Wallis, only daughter of Frederick Wallis, who had his seat in the House as representing Essex County. I remember him as a boy. The old gentleman is dead now. Some relatives of his still live in Kent, I think. I have lost sight of my old acquaintances and relations, too, since I went to Cambridge. I think," he added, with a smile, "that my relations feared that I should make one more of those expensive pieces of family honor that have to be kept up and tolerated for family honor's sake—a poor relation; but I never have, and never intend to trouble them. But there, I am afraid I shall be boring you, and I have all the talk to myself."

"Pray, go on, Mr. Hope," said Miss Falconcourt, who was as much interested as Eva. "Miss De Vere is delighted, I am positive."

"Yes; I am very grateful, Mr. Hope, to anyone who can tell me something of those whom I never knew. If it does not bore Miss Falconcourt, there is no subject more welcome to me."

Mr. Hope's large, sentimental eyes were full of pity as he fixed them upon Eva, and he sighed involuntarily, as if he could look back into her past history and read some of its dark and painful secrets.

"From what I remember of the family pedigree," he went on, "the present Lord De Vere, if he is alive still, was the son of a baroness in her own right; she married a colonel or lieutenant-colonel Pennington. It was purely a love-match, I believe, for she was much his senior, and had as many thousands as he had hundreds. The Hopes and Penningtons were cousins, so that the late baroness would be a sort of third cousin to me. You must understand, Miss De Vere, that Colonel Pennington took Lady De Vere's maiden name, in order that his child should inherit the title and property. You know nothing of this, I presume?"

"Nothing, Mr. Vernon."

"Surely, your guardian, Mrs. Brierley, must know?"

"I cannot say. She is very reticent, and told me nothing of my family history."

"Perhaps she may really know little or nothing." "It is very strange, Mr. Hope. I cannot understand why she should have kept me so thoroughly ignorant of my parents. Sometimes I think they must have done something very dreadful, and when such thoughts do take possession of me I feel an outcast indeed."

"The unhappy end of your parents may alone be the cause of Mrs. Brierley's silence. However, as I told you, Pennington adopted the name of De Vere, and his only son became Lord De Vere at his mother's death and inherited the property as it stood. He married at an early age and changed his religion to please his wife, which caused a break-up in the family. The poorer members he cared nothing for, the influential ones he tried to pacify. Amongst the poorer ones was a cousin of his mother, the baroness. This cousin was Horace De Vere, your father's father—your grandfather simply. They never came together after his lordship's marriage, and your father when he left college entered the commercial line, for which he was well adapted, and never sought his grand relations after that. Lord De Vere has been abroad for years. His wife died when you were a child, and his only son fell in the Crimean War. Wifeless, childless, and at war with all his relations, Lord De Vere traveled from place to place seeking excitement. I have heard nothing of him now for eighteen months."

"I fear it would be presumptuous for me to imagine that I am so highly connected," smiled Evelyn; "the similarity of name may be a mere accident."

"I assure you, no. Look here: I have a few extracts from the genealogical tree of the De Veres, and could trace their pedigree to goodness knows what remote period. See here," said he, pointing with his index finger to a number of small figures and names written legibly on a quarter of a sheet of note-paper, "follow this line and you will see how near James De Vere is to those I have mentioned."

Evelyn's quick perception immediately grasped the whole matter-of-fact way of getting at the point of anything was of great service to Eva, who, under the influence of her almost solitary life, was sentimental, if not romantic.

"My dear child," said Miss Falconcourt, who was very womanly and sensible since her father's serious illness, "I should so like to see you have a little more spirits. You are too thoughtful. All your life seems to be concentrated into one dot of the obscure future, a dot that your mind's eye and imagination dwell upon. clue to the dates you require—it is so long ago. I may find out the month—the year you already know."

"Thank you, Hope." The earnest feeling of gratitude that was conveyed in those words brought a slight flush to Hope's cheeks, and, pressing Eva's hand, he promised to do all in his power.

The year and the month were enough to commence with. Eva by degrees, and at times when Hope least thought the subject was in her mind, questioned him as to the means one would adopt if one wished to find out particulars of any great event that may have happened years ago.

"By either going to the Museum or getting someone to go for you," Hope answered. "There is a place too in Fleet street, called Poole's Coffee-house. A file of papers is kept there, and it is very easy to get what information you want from them."

This was all Evelyn wanted to know. The first opportunity she could seize upon she turned to good account in the matter. Carefully cutting out of a daily morning paper an advertisement asking a private-inquiry office, she made her way there just as resolute as women can be in circumstances of trial and emergency, knowing that she can always command from the opposite sex respect, protection and assistance, which men so often deny to others and themselves.

The private-inquiry office was in the city, and, contrary to Eva's expectations, a most ordinary-looking house, with a brass plate on the door bearing the words "Private-inquiry Office." The office Eva was ushered into was an ordinary old-fashioned front parlor, with a rusty desk for the clerk, and a large writing-table, with chairs for two. Mr. Hervey Brett, the principal, was seated in one of the chairs, and received Eva with a bow at once dignified and sombre.

Eva was a little awed, but only a little. She gave her name as Miss Brierley, and said that she had been commissioned by a friend, who, for reasons of a personal nature, wished to know the full particulars concerning the ruin and death of James De Vere of the "Lombard," who died on his way out from England years ago.

Mr. Hervey Brett made some memoranda, cross-questioned Eva a little, took a couple of guineas on account, and said that in less than a week she should have information embracing every detail connected with this sad tragedy, and dismissed the office, he turned with a smile to a youthful clerk, and, throwing the memoranda over to him, said:

"Here you are, Bob; a little job for you. Look through the entries and see if the name is down; I think it is. It will take you a couple of hours, I suppose, going over the newspapers of that date."

"Don't suppose I shall, sir—he, he!" grinned Master Bob, with a loving leer at the two guineas, still lying on the table.

The gentleman who advertised that he could unravel the deepest mysteries, discover murderers, forgers, absconders, runaway daughters, and undutiful sons, gave Master Bob half a crown, with the injunction that he was to set about the matter on the morrow.

Eva returned to Kensington well pleased with her first step in the matter. She could remain quiet now until she heard from Brett, and in the meantime she must turn her attention to Mrs. Brierley's affairs.

A few days previous to the date fixed on for the wedding, Evelyn sent Mrs. Brierley a handsome necklace, and Marian gave a handsome locket to attach to it. As yet Eva had but small call on her own purse. Miss Falconcourt never ceased loading her with presents; and once out of every third time that the milliner took an order from Miss Falconcourt, that lady would be sure to include a dress for Eva in the order.

The house was getting a little more lively, now Mr. Falconcourt was recovering slowly, but steadily, and of course Mr. Doyle came in for all the credit, and got as much reverence as if he had actually given Falconcourt a new lease of life. With this change for the better in the house, with a handsome and talented young kinsman related to families of noble birth, Evelyn felt a little happier, and accordingly, on the 5th of February, the date chosen by Mrs. Brierley, Eva presented herself very early in the morning at Merton Villa.

Mrs. Brierley was up, and looked as though she had passed a rather sleepless night. She was nervous and agitated, entirely unlike her placid self.

Little Spec came bounding up to Eva, and yelping with delight. The poor little animal had fretted after Eva, and seemed unhappy and uneasy always when Plummer was in the house.

"I am glad you are come," said Mrs. Brierley; "I don't know how it is, but I feel my nerves all shaken this morning—I'm not at all myself."

"How can you be, dear, at such a time? I am sure that I should wonder if anyone could be herself at all under trying circumstances of this kind."

"Well, well, it will soon be over. Do you see how nicely Plummer has done the place up?"

Eva did not, and she praised Hope for his industry and good taste, though she did privately think that he only worked from a selfish motive! Still she tried to make Mrs. Brierley as cheerful as she could by being cheerful herself.

"See, I have brought here ostensibly with some wine—a present from Miss Falconcourt."

Mrs. Brierley smiled, pleased by this mark of attention—she was grateful, too, that Eva had come so early.

"I scarcely know how to get on alone," she said, "nor what to put on."

Eva wondered at this, for she had been here only a few days previously and arranged the trousseau. Mrs. Brierley in her perplexity was more likely to adopt the ridiculous than the sublime, and the matter was a delicate one for Eva to handle. She could not very well remind her good friend that she had seen the best side of fifty, and poor Mrs. Brierley gave way in these few short bridal hours to more vanity than she had been guilty of during the whole of her lifetime.

"I do not wish people to think that Stephen is marrying a woman old enough to be his mother," she said insinuatingly to Eva, and with a slight blush. "It's my duty to him to make the best of myself."

"He can have little to complain of, dear," said Evelyn quietly. "Mr. Plummer looks your senior."

"Does he, child? Do you really think so?"

"Everybody thinks so."

Mrs. Brierley smiled again, grateful to "everybody," and glanced wistfully in the dressing-glass. The bright daylight showed up the few silver streaks in her smooth brown hair. She had never noticed them so much until now; she sighed unconsciously, perhaps wishing that she could go back ten years or so, before these silver time-marks came, when the prime of womanhood was still upon her.

Eva, looking at the grave, white face, wondered how it had borne the brunt of wear and worry for so many years. She was strong and robust, and her face had scarcely a line upon it; her eyes were bright and full of expression, and her teeth almost perfect in form and color, and not one was false. Had she taken Eva's advice, and put on a bonnet and plain attire, she would have looked the handsome woman that she really was; but she would have her way, and the result caused Eva a pang of shame and regret.

She wore a bride's veil and bridal-wreath. The pallor of age, the agitation, and the head sprinkled gray suggested at once age made ghastly by mocking the privileges of youth.

Never had Mrs. Brierley shown to worse advantage. But who could tell her so? At ten o'clock a friend and her daughter came over from the village to be present at the ceremony; half an hour later two hack-flys drove up. Eva consulted her watch, and found that there was not much time to spare. This was communicated, a moment's bustle followed, and then the party issued forth and took their seats in the hack-flys, and drove off to an old church near Uxbridge.

The sunlight was full on that extensive, imposing building, Harwell Lunatic Asylum, and somehow Mrs. Brierley noticed it more on this occasion than on any other.

"How cheerful," she thought with a grim smile on her face, "will say that the carriage ought to stop here—I always hate passing this place."

At the church they found Plummer and a friend he had brought from London. Plummer had squeezed himself into a light frock-coat and white waistcoat. The buttons of the coat were strained to the utmost, and his gloves threatened every moment a sort of explosion. They looked as though they had been overcrammed with sausage-meat, and only required a prick with a fork to give up their contents.

Still, there was a sort of rugged beauty in the man's sunburnt face, and he looked happy enough. The ceremony was soon over, and as they walked out of the church, arm-in-arm, Mrs. Bri —— pardon me, Plummer henceforth—was surprised to see the man from Manchester.

There he stood by the side of the path, dressed in shabby black, bareheaded and haggard; a little girl, with a pale, pinched face, and large, mournful eyes, dressed in black, with crape-trimmings, stood holding him by the coat. Jasper Strong gave the child a nudge, and, looking up at the bride with tearful eyes, she made a curtsy as Jasper Strong mumbled out:

"God bless you, lady, and may you prosper!"

Only once he glanced up at Plummer, and then a sudden glitter shone in the pale-blue eyes. He had no blessing for him.

As Mrs. Brierley passed on and bowed, she noticed that there was a deep hat-band round the poor fellow's hat. It told a tale with those who understood. The man from Manchester had come back wifeless, his heart desolate, his home gone!—come back just at the moment when she suffered nothing, feared nothing. The suffering was all his.

CHAPTER X.

MR. PLUMMER THINKS HE WILL BE PLEASANTLY HUMOROUS.

Mr. Jasper Strong had only returned from Manchester the day before—returned wifeless, and brought his motherless child with him. Hearing then of Mrs. Brierley's intended marriage, he thought that he would like to see her, and going over to the house only child as the lady who had been so very good to them all. He, poor, simple fellow, never thought it likely that his appearance in the sombre emblems of death would cause an effect, yet the picture would have made a touching one not devoid of pathos and a moral.

A crush of pity came upon simple-hearted Mrs. Plummer at a sight of the sorrow-stricken figure. She paused and held Plummer back.

"There is the poor Jasper," she said. "He has come back a widower. Do not let us forget him in our own good fortune, Stephen."

Stephen turned back with as much good grace as his surly nature could assume.

"You seem to have been in trouble, guv'nor," he said. "Here, little gal, you can 'ave this, and your dad can call in a day or so, if he likes. How old are you?"

"Ten, sir."

"Ten—you're a mite for your age;" and, patting her cheek with his fat forefinger, he left her standing dumb in wonder, and the possessor of a golden half sovereign.

The bride soon took the wedding-party back to Merton Villa. And breakfast was there laid out for them—nothing very gorgeous or extensive, but plenty of plain and good fare. The guests did not stay very long. Plummer had made arrangements for a week's trip to Hastings, and during that time the house would be shut up, as the phrase goes, though old Mrs. Ford would be shut up in it.

Eva did not like Plummer a bit more than ever; she was civil only, though he was gracious to a very noticeable degree, and addressed her by her Christian name as pat as if they had been friends forever. Eva could only snatch five minutes alone with her old friend before they parted. Each promised to write to the other; and Eva went all over the house to take a last look at the old home before it was changed, as she felt sure it would be, by the presence and control of its uncouth master.

She returned to Kensington by rail, sad at heart, for the future only presented a very dull prospect to her now. But still, as Miss Falconcourt said quaintly, there was no good to be got by brooding over it; the change at home might make her feel strange, but she would get over that soon.

She did not care to see anyone all that day, only Marian, who kept to her boudoir when not called away by the presence of some kindly visitor. In the evening Mr. Doyle called in to see Mr. Falconcourt on his way home, and, as was his custom, he appeared in the boudoir to see Marian, and report progress. Miss Falconcourt was called away, and he and Eva were left together.

He seemed tired and languid, and in some way constrained when alone with her. His new position had changed him, and Evelyn, noticing this, became shy and reticent.

"You have been home, Evelyn," he said at length, sitting down by her side, "have you not?"

"Yes, Mr. Doyle."

"My dear Evelyn, why do you call me Mr. Doyle?" he said, throwing some reproach into his voice. "Why has it come to this?"

"I don't know," she answered simply—"really, I don't. I told you once that I should only get used to using the more familiar name in time."

"Is that the only cause?" he asked doubtingly. "You are young, my dear child, and I thought that perhaps the influences around you might easily have wrought a change."

"The influences around me, Ernest?"

"Yes. From what I can see, you are courted and flattered as much here as Miss Falconcourt is, from Mr. Hope upwards."

In a moment Evelyn got the one to his meaning—he was jealous of poor Hope. At first she felt inclined to be angry, but her better sense prevailed, and she gave vent to a little, amused laugh.

"Mr. Hope," she said, "is a relative of mine."

"Indeed! This is news. Pray tell me."

"Well, it is only a few days since he told me." And, briefly as she could, Eva told him pretty nearly all that Hope had said respecting the De Vere pedigree. Doyle was interested and pleased. What Hope had said so coincided with the little information he had gleaned from Mrs. Brierley concerning Eva that he was forced to believe there was some truth in it.

"Mrs. Brierley was married to-day," Eva said, wishing to turn the subject.

"So I was given to understand. What's her name now?"

"Plummer. I do not like him."

"Because he is a stranger, perhaps. Ladies are not always charitable in their decisions," smiled Doyle.

"Perhaps I am in this instance. I don't quite know why I do not like him; perhaps because he is only rough and uncouth."

"Yet you should respect the man that was friendly with your father."

"I do not know that he was exactly a friend of my poor, dear father's." Eva had shown a little female weakness here, a feminine trait that the fair sex rather must have been equal to any man in the land, and felt equally positive that he would not have such friends as Stephen Plummer.

"My dear child, you must learn in the world to accept of people as you find them; take them at their best, and at least be affable, if not amiable," said Doyle, who, like David Copperfield, thought that his fiancee's mind wanted forming, and that a little worldly advice would not be out of place.

"You mean, Ernest, that I am to wear a mask, behind which I must hide all that is truth, nature, impulse and generosity?"

"Impulse, my dear Eva, is a creation of nature that requires strong control. Truth in this world must not always be spoken; nature is often to be covered by falsehood, and generosity is a human weakness that we give way to because it affords us a certain amount of pleasure and self-gratulation. It may please a man to give because he has something to spare, and need not deny himself any one thing at the moment; some men are generous for the sake of effect, some out of vanity, and others because they wish the world to see it. Many of the most generous-hearted men, as they are called, begrudge paying their rent or their tailor, or refuse a brother half a sovereign, that they may squander it away with acquaintances for the sake of their acquaintances' hypocritical homage or surfeiting praise."

"All men are not like that, surely?"

"I trust not, Eva; but this world has strange fashions, and is bitterly selfish. You must seem to be richest when you are poorest; you must be gayest when most sadly oppressed with trouble. You may show a man all over your house, speaking figuratively, show him every nook and corner; but you must keep that closed locked which contains the skeleton, or your friends will drop off, and let you sink down to whatever level your cares may bring you, and the end will be utter, hopeless degradation, and your companions men that once on a time you would not have had to clean your boots. Such is life, Eva, and so you will find it. Every man and woman must fight his or her battle as fairly as it is possible, which means that you must meet cunning with cunning, truth with truth, force where force is required; and, when one has a humbug to deal with, one must meet him by being a humbug oneself. Not still, but, my dear Eva, is what in state circles is called diplomacy. Is it not so, Mr. Hope?" smiled Doyle as the secretary entered.

"I beg your pardon. I did not hear what you said," answered Hope coldly. He hated doctors, Doyle particularly. Doyle repeated what he had been saying to Eva; Hope looked grim.

"I don't suppose," he said, "that Miss De Vere cares to have diplomacy defined. There can be but little interest in the definition."

"Well, it is one item more in our useful knowledge," smiled Eva, and Doyle laughed a brief, spiteful sort of laugh, which seemed aimed defiantly at Hope.

"A sort of useful knowledge that must be gained by experience, and is better not gained at all," answered Hope gravely. "A woman should not see the world with a man's eyes, nor treat it with a man's scepticism. Women should live for the love of life and happiness made by the world's purest pleasures. Men must live by whatever means circumstances put in their way; and whether by diplomacy, legal roguery, or what our American friends call sharp practice, live we must, and fight our battle amongst the grim realities of life that our women should live in peace and happiness apart from the worldly sin and sorrow."

Eva's eyes flashed, and she glanced up a grateful, admiring look at Hope. Doyle rose to depart with a sneer on his lip.

"You believe only in the poetry of life," he said sarcastically. "You will find it dangerous ground, Mr. Hope."

"I think not. I believe in the poetry of life for women. Man must take life just as fate decides to present it to them."

The entrance of Miss Falconcourt put an end to the discussion, and after a little general chit-chat Doyle departed. Mr. Falconcourt was getting rapidly better. He could sit up in bed now, though he was not yet allowed to leave his room; sometimes both Eva and Miss Falconcourt would sit with him and read or amuse him simply with their conversation; and so a week or so passed pleasantly enough, as weeks must pass in this life, for it is impossible for persons most tragically situated to be always in trouble, action, and making speeches or dumbfounding revelations.

As the time had slipped away with Eva, so it had with her best and truest friend down at Hastings. Mrs. Plummer had spent a little more than a week in that charming seaside resort. They had visited the Conqueror's Stone, on which, according to ancient lore, it is reported that William the Conqueror found a breakfast spread for him when he landed. Mr. and Mrs. Plummer drove over to Battle—the place where Harold was defeated; they had visited the Battery; they went on Sunday to All Saints' Church—an unusual thing for Stephen Plummer; and the remainder of the time was spent in such pleasures as the time of year and place afforded.

Somehow, Mrs. Plummer was not sorry to return home. The change of scene had done her good, and she had been very happy; but her heart was with the old home, and her face flushed gladly when the villa came in sight.

Her husband had not been in the most lively mood while they were at Hastings—at least, not in her company. He generally seemed more bored than anything else, and was sulky always.

He evinced some sullen satisfaction with the comfort when at home, but said little. After a few days he mumbled something about the place being so "doosid fur" from London. Poor Mrs. Plummer only put this down as quite natural, seeing that he was a man of very active life. More than once a suspicion had come across her that he was not quite so contented as he might have been; still she was a patient woman, and never would complain without cause.

TO BE CONTINUED.

MY FIRST INTRODUCTION TO SOL. SMITH.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

In the Winter of 1842-3, being in New Orleans, I met a quondam friend, who had, the year before, been a messmate with me on a frontier campaign in the then infant Republic of Texas. He was of the profession of the "sock and buskin," and was "walking gentleman" in the company of Messrs. Ludlow & Smith, proprietors of the American Theatre. In company with a comedian named Saunders and the bookkeeper of the theatre, named Cook, he had a room fronting La Fayette square, where I used to spend considerable of my leisure time.

At that time the proprietors were annoyed by the many applications for employment by ambitious aspirants who wanted "places" on the boards where they could climb the ladder of fame. To escape this annoyance, a "standing committee" was appointed to sit on all such applications. This standing committee appointed a sub-committee, whose duty it was to examine all applicants, and recommend such as they deemed eligible to the standing committee. The persons above named at that time held the distinguished honor of being members of the sub-committee; and after the writer had been with them a short time, his name was added to theirs as a member. A history of the doings of this body; the varied, strange and ludicrous scenes which were enacted during their investigations; the phases of human nature which were developed; the degree of credulity, superstition and awe which was brought to the surface under their manipulations, would fill a volume of strange, weird and entertaining narratives, which would seem far more incredulous than any tale of fiction ever presented to the public. But of this I do not propose now to speak.

My former messmate, whose name was Sutherland, was very much of a wag, and was always ready for a joke. Among the company then playing at the American were two stars, who subsequently obtained considerable notoriety in their profession, and who even then stood high among their fellow-actors. I refer to Mr. De Bar and Miss Petrie. Being both unmarried, and apparently quite fond of each other, it is not strange that rumor should have it that they were to be made one flesh. This being the subject of conversation, one night at the committee-room, on Lafayette square, after the close of the theatre I wrote the following lines and laid them before the committee:

"Mourn, friends of horticulture, near and far,
From the fair garden—cellbacy's ground—
Too soon the law the Pe-tree will De Bar.
And vacant leave the spot where now 'tis found."

After reading it, Sutherland produced a sheet of blue letter-paper, and requested me to transcribe it thereon, which I did.

It was the custom at the "American" for the bookkeeper to make out each morning what he called a "bill of the house" for the past night, showing the gross receipts, the expenses and the net profits (the "commonwealth" system being then in vogue). Sol Smith, the principal proprietor, deeming it both fair and proper to let his actors know just how the theatre was progressing from night to night. This bill of the house was always written on blue letter-paper, and laid on the prompter's table at rehearsal, so that each actor could read it for himself.

The next day, at rehearsal, as soon as the bill was deposited on the table, Sutherland picked it up, and, after reading it, dexterously deposited its counterpart, which I had written the night before, on the table in its place.

This was soon picked up by an actor, and, being read with astonishment and merriment, handed to another, who in his turn passed it to a third, and in this manner it went the rounds of the company, reaching De Bar and Miss Petrie only after being read and appreciated by the entire company.

Miss Petrie, being of a somewhat sensitive temperament, took it in high dudgeon, as it might well be supposed she would, whether there was or was not any truth in the allusion; and the writer of the bad rhymes, although unknown, did not escape without severe handling.

The affair coming to the ears of "Old Sol"—as Mr. Smith was familiarly termed—he instigated a rigid investigation; but as no one was acquainted with my handwriting, and the committee had no clue to guide them, the search was fruitless. One day, after the excitement had died away, Sutherland remarked to one of the company that he knew who wrote the rhymes about Petrie and De Bar. And, on being questioned, rather reluctantly said that Smith wrote them, but requested the informed not to say anything about it. Although a promise of secrecy was readily given, as is generally the case under such circumstances, the information, after wing in some mysterious manner; and as no one was known about the theatre by the name of Smith except "Old Sol," it soon became the common talk in the establishment that he had been playing one of his pranks at him; and Miss Petrie and De Bar, considerably nettled at being so ridiculed, and so covered by falsehood, and generosity is a human weakness that we give way to because it affords us a certain amount of pleasure and self-gratulation. It may please a man to give because he has something to spare, and need not deny himself any one thing at the moment; some men are generous for the sake of effect, some out of vanity, and others because they wish the world to see it. Many of the most generous-hearted men, as they are called, begrudge paying their rent or their tailor, or refuse a brother half a sovereign, that they may squander it away with acquaintances for the sake of their acquaintances' hypocritical homage or surfeiting praise."

"All men are not like that, surely?"

"I trust not, Eva; but this world has strange fashions, and is bitterly selfish. You must seem to be richest when you are poorest; you must be gayest when most sadly oppressed with trouble. You may show a man all over your house, speaking figuratively, show him every nook and corner; but you must keep that closed locked which contains the skeleton, or your friends will drop off, and let you sink down to whatever level your cares may bring you, and the end will be utter, hopeless degradation, and your companions men that once on a time you would not have had to clean your boots. Such is life, Eva, and so you will find it. TO CORRESPONDENTS.

☞ Letters seeking information replied to only through this department; no answers by mail.

E. H. W., Brooklyn.—1. To procure engagements in variety theatres you should advertise, and also write to the various managers. 2. Ask the manager, when you close an engagement, to recommend a good boarding-place, and give you full instructions as regards the address. 3. The salary is agreed upon at the time of making the engagement, and the manager reserves the right to discharge you after your first performance, should you prove incompetent, or if you have misrepresented matters. 4. It is not necessary for a person in the theatre can always be found who will assist you in changing your costumes. 5. It can. 6. Write to the Librarian of Congress, Washington, D. C., inclosing a stamp for his reply, and he will send you full printed instructions how to procure a copyright.

MATHEWS, Boston.—"In the game to-day between Boston and Harvard, in Harvard's second inning Thayer was first striker, but did not take his place at the bat, and the next striker, Ernst, came to the bat and got a base-hit. Schafer then asked if he was not the wrong striker—if he had not struck out of turn—and, it being so decided, Thayer was given out by the umpire. In scoring, what are the proper symbols to indicate such a case as this? Who put him out?".....No one is entitled to the credit of putting him out. A separate line is added to the score in the effect that so-and-so struck out of turn.

T. W. J., Tiffin.—"There is one man out. A goes to the bat, and makes his third base. B goes to the bat, knocks a fly which is caught; A starts for home-base, ball is thrown to third, and A is put out, making three men out. Now, who goes to the bat first at the beginning of the next inning, C or D?".....The rule is so plain that we cannot conceive why you find it necessary to ask the question. The player to the bat in the ensuing inning is he whose name is next on the list of strikers to the name of the third man out. B, being next in order at the bat to A, is of course the next striker, A being third man out.

T. H. L., St. Louis.—"There are three men holding bases; he fouls his bat, and has three strikes, the catcher does not catch him out, but picks up the ball, and touches the home-plate; he then passes the ball to first base and puts the batsman out. The question now arises, is the man that was on third base out, or has he the right to score, provided he touches the home-plate without being touched with the ball?".....The player on third is out, forced out. The catcher's point was to have passed the ball to third after touching home-base, unless two hands were out.

MATES, Chillicothe.—1. It might be advisable for you to go to some large city. 2. After displaying your capabilities to some manager, if you proved successful he might be willing to advance you sufficient money to procure costumes and deduct it subsequently from your salary. 3. About $40 per week for both. 4. You would stand a much better chance of getting an engagement in the Fall than in the Summer. 5. It is proper to assume a name, if your own is not suited to stage purposes. 6. Copyright under your real name.

QUENEC.—A base-runner has a right to return to the base he left—as far as the occupancy of said base by a succeeding runner is concerned—until he reaches or touches the next base legally, and in the case you quote the base-runner going home had a right to return to third, thereby obliging the runner going from second to third to return to second. 2. Any base-runner interfering with a fielder in fielding a fly ball is out.

HARTMANS, Boston.—The Ward Brothers rowed against the Paris crew of St. John, N. B., once only, at Springfield, Mass., Oct. 21, 1868. The Paris crew won easily, covering the six miles in 39·28½. On Sept. 11, 1867, the Ward brothers defeated a crew from St. John — D. McCaffrey, John McCaffrey, John Morris, and Thomas McAuley—over the same course, in 39.

W. C., Demamora.—1. Daniel E. Sickles shot Philip Barton Key on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 27, 1859, in Washington, D. C. 2. Sickles' counsel were James T. Brady, John Graham, Thomas Francis Meagher, D. T. Dickinson, Samuel Chilton and Daniel Radcliffe. 3. Dr. Harvey Burdell was murdered either at night on Jan. 30, 1857, or in the early morning of Jan. 31.

STEWART.—George Morton was born in this city, and made his debut on the stage at the Bowery Theatre in August, 1866, for W. B. Freligh's benefit. He has acted in this city at Wood's Museum, Niblo's Garden, old Fifth-avenue Opera-house, the French (now Lyceum) Theatre, and Booth's Theatre in May, 1875. He was last season engaged in New Orleans, La.

TIFFIN, Paris.—The umpire in a match has nothing whatever to do with bets, or, if he has, he violates the rules of the game. Of course he cannot decide "bets off" unless the rules of the game admit of such a decision. It is not the umpire's place to decide any questions of the kind.

H. W. T.—1. Honors do not count that side which stands at nine points. 2. She has retired from the profession. 3. We cannot say. 4. Portraits of the late Mary Devlin cannot be had, and THE CLIPPER containing an account of her death is out of print. 5. The gentleman named is employed as you state.

CHING CHANG, Biddeford.—1. It would depend entirely upon the number of colors it was to be printed in. A little size cut would cost about $30. Some printers make a design free of charge, if sufficient printing is ordered. 2. 3. Buy at any bookstore a little work on fireworks. 4. From $25 a week upward, according to merit and reputation. 5. Twenty years of age is not too old to begin.

BEN BOLT.—1. People and Merriman fought on Amos-street dock, this city, July 27, 1858. 2. Hyer and Sullivan fought on Rock Point, Kent County, Md., Feb. 7, 1849.

AMATEUR RUNNER.—No one can rightfully claim to be the champion one-mile runner of this country at the present time.

JOE BULLOCK, Amherst.—1. The fastest time on record for 440 yards, running, is 49½ seconds, by R. Buttery, in England. 2. No authentic record.

C. G. A., Boston.—The report states that in the race in working boats July 4, 1874, the St. John boat (Crown Prince) weighed 1,700, and the South Boston boat 1,800.

K. G., Philadelphia.—Detehanty and Keogler are said to have received $300 per week, which, we believe, is the largest salary ever paid to two song-and-dance performers.

HOWARD.—Parepa Rosa, Miss Kellogg and Santley sang together in Italian opera at the Academy of Music, this city, for a season of three weeks, commencing April 1, 1872.

STEADY READER, Jersey City.—Advertisements do not take up space in the columns. There are several persons in this city who teach the business. Peruse our advertising columns.

C. H., Providence.—It would take us a month to answer, even if the gentleman's horse is entered somewhere in Pennsylvania or not.

HASTFORD.—Frank Pastor is married. When last we heard from him, some months ago, he was performing brief engagements with circuses in England.

TWO SUBSCRIBERS, Cowpens.—1. 7:19½, by Fellowcraft, Saratoga, Aug. 30, 1874. 2. You will find all those matters in THE CLIPPER ALMANAC.

J. A. R., Providence.—No player but Sexton has run 200 in the Philadelphia tournament, and 200 have never been run in any other three-ball tournament.

A. and R.—If but one act was played—or, in other words, if it was not intended to play more than one act—the bet is a draw. Both parties are right.

W. B. M.—In baseball parlance, "winning in three innings" means that the best three innings of one club will exceed the runs of the other club in all its innings. A wins.

D. W. B.—We some five weeks ago explained why it was that Washington was born on Feb. 11 and also on Feb. 22, and cannot now spare the space to reprint it.

C. E. B. H., Columbia.—We would advise you to refer your case to a good physician before it assumes too serious a form. A, the strain may have been sufficient to produce a varicose condition in the veins of the lip. We know nothing of the efficacy of the medicine referred to.

BROAD COURT, Washington.—Miss Mary Anderson made her debut as a dramatic star in Mozart's Theatre, Louisville, Ky., Nov. 27, 1875, acting Juliet in "Romeo and Juliet." We believe that she is a native of that city. She has assumed no stage name.

O. H. B., Columbia.—It depended upon the fast whether the refusal of the field side to avail themselves of plain chances to put their opponents out amounted to a refusal to continue the game. If it did, the decision was correct.

DEXTER, Albany.—Weston never walked 120 miles in 24 consecutive hours, nor did he ever walk 500 miles in six days, either at Newark or elsewhere.

REX, Wheeling.—We have not heard anything of that organization since that season, and do not think it is in existence.

REGULATORS, Baton Rouge.—1. Jim Mace was born in 1831; Joe Coburn in 1835. 2. We are not aware that he was ever in California.

L. E., Galveston.—That is something which has never been satisfactorily settled.

J. D. SNELLING, Richmond.—Read THE CLIPPER ALMANAC, price 15 cents.

E. J. H., St. Louis.—We have not heard, but should think you would be able to find out there better than we.

REAP, Omaha.—They fought at New Orleans, La., May 10, 1870. Mace winning.

J. W. H., Louisville.—St. Clair skated 24 consecutive hours, with 20 minutes' rest, at Cincinnati, O.

S. W.—Address a letter of inquiry to the gentleman named, in care of the San Francisco Minstrels. We keep no record of the stump-speeches that have been published.

CLIPPER.—1. See answer to "Novice, Trenton," in THE CLIPPER dated May 6 last. 2. An advertisement will cost you 15 cents per line, agate measure.

R. E. W., Myerstown.—1. In Beekman street, this city. 2. It is too early in the season to express an intelligent opinion.

THE STELLA.—The Boston (Mass.) Theatre will seat 2,972 persons, and the Grand Opera-house in this city, 1,883. The first-named theatre is larger every way.

C. A. S., Pittsfield.—A bets B that the majority of the games (baseball) played on the 25th inst. would be won by the East; who wins?".....A loses.

T. H. M., Marysville.—No answers by mail. We do not procure dramatic engagements for performers. Apply to some dramatic agency.

BASEBALL, Louisville.—A loses. B did not bet that the Athletics would even win. The second game has no bearing on the wager.

J. H., Elizabethport.—The backer of the East wins. Had the West won the tie game, the bet, as made, would have been a draw.

JUNIATA CLUB, Philadelphia.—1. Meyerle was third baseman of the Philadelphia nine in 1873. 2. No; Cuthbert played in the St. Louis nine in 1875.

CINCINNATI RED STOCKINGS.—Had the games not been the three-ball carom, Sexton's runs of 251 and 287 would be of no account.

W. D., Louisville.—If there are eight clubs, and each plays ten games with every other club, that will make a total of 280 games.

J. F. W., Baltimore.—That tieing player who is nearest the end of the shaft hand is entitled to score the game, in the event of a tie at "seven-up."

E. De H., Pittston.—The width of Broadway, this city, from curb to curb, opposite the St. Nicholas Hotel, is 45ft., and from building to building, 80ft. 4in.

DECLINED.—"Play Your Part Like a Man," "Muldoon's Wife," "Wille Joe's Ale Was Now," "How Can I Forget Thee, Mary?"

NOVICE.—On May 20 we asked Harry Wright if he had seen the obituary.

M. S., Toronto.—Barry Sullivan is a native of Dublin, Ireland.

O. O. T.—1. Katie Putnam was born in Chicago, Ill. 2. Loraine Rogers is the husband of Charlotte Thompson.

OLD CONTRIBUTOR.—Your father's friend's mother would have no interest in the will.

AJAX, Chicago.—We do not know enough about the pasteboard diamond trade to recommend anyone.

DAN ELDRED.—Not having published such challenge, we cannot make room for your answer.

CONSTANT READER, Watertown.—Tom Sayers the pugilist never visited the United States.

TORY.—The last trick counts ten at sixty-six, provided the trump has not been turned down.

W. S., Fort Randall.—We know of nothing that will remove it.

X. Y. Z., Carbondale.—The proviso as to nine innings renders the bet a draw.

OMNIA PRO PATRIA, Washington.—See CLIPPER ALMANAC for fastest running time.

Y. K., Pinckneyville.—The man must unload the cars within thirty hours after beginning the task.

J. C. S., Erie.—S is out on his call.

BUCKEYE, Pittsburg.—Bets on the result are determined by the score of 9 to 0.

J. W. F., Smyrna.—See CLIPPER ALMANAC for Goldsmith Maid's best time.

APOLLO, Sacramento.—B loses. He had to beat three, not tie it.

CROTON STREET.—Isaac M. Singer of sewing-machine fame is dead.

BACKET, San Francisco.—Do not know the draft of the Robert E. Lee.

CONSTANT READER.—Step down to the City Hall and examine the poll-lists.

E. M. G.—Sallie Clinetop is living, and performing with her sister in Philadelphia.

SPENCER.—We do not keep any record of the owners of horses from one to two.

MEDICUS, Boston.—C can demand that he be shown both hands. Both may be foul, for all he could know otherwise.

MARINETTE, Wis.—See CLIPPER ALMANAC for Chronological History of the United States.

S.—B loses. So far from being beaten in three innings, the Athletics were not beaten at all.

OLD SPORT, Quincy.—A loses his money. All mistakes go to the maker.

F. C., St. Louis.—1. See Mr. Dobson's advertisement in this issue. 2. Your handwriting is only fair.

J. M. C.—U. S. Deputy-marshal John E. Stephenson was murdered July 11, 1873, in Jersey City.

W. D. L., Philadelphia.—The gentleman is almost everywhere. We cannot fix a residence.

J. M., Chillicothe.—Three aces, a tray, and a four for the turn-up card count 12 at cribbage.

T. MCK., Montreal.—We know nothing of them further than that they have paid their advertising bills.

R. C. W., Philadelphia.—If you will mention the articles wanted, we can give you a more intelligent answer.

D. P., Biddeford.—1. About $25 for engraving. 2 Cannot say. 3. Yes. 4. Yes.

J. E.—We cannot tell whether Aaron Appleton is at the present time in the employ of Augustin Daly or not.

C. J. K.—James Wood was captain and second-baseman of the Troy nine in 1872.

J. E. H.—Wood went from Troy to Chicago in the Fall of 1872.

OLD READER.—Kathi Lanner, when last we heard of her (a few weeks ago), was in San Francisco, Cal.

CLARENCE, Newcomerstown.—A fly ball held in any way, except by cap or hat, is out.

HARLEM MARION.—Harry Wright plays in the New Haven nine. His brother Harry is manager of the Bostons.

SHORT STOP.—1. It was the best game marked by such a score. 2. We know nothing of the gentleman alluded to.

S. E., Providence.—It is an item of but little interest to the public, and is simply free advertising.

CONSTANT READER.—As soon as either player had made the necessary points, he should have called out.

INQUISITIVE, St. Catherines.—As you state the case, C can play it alone.

S. P. B.—There is such a word as peony—it is the name of a flower.

BALTIMORE.—He can give the beggar out, but the beggar must play his cards.

CONSTANT READER, Burlington.—There is no record for quarter-mile trotting.

MOOSE, Dudley.—The player next on the left of the dealer has the "age" at draw-poker.

CONSTANT SUBSCRIBER, London.—The backer of Guelph wins.

J. W., New York.—A queen, tray, two aces in hand, and an ace turned up count 12 at cribbage.

G. A. F., Memphis.—Do not know of anything that will remove them without injuring the skin.

SHOOTING-STICK.—We have no knowledge of any such paper.

ED. C. B., Indianapolis.—It came to hand too late to be used.

ANTOLINI.—If we find the sketch suitable, it shall have a place in our columns.

A. L. H., White Plains.—They do not publish any almanac.

J. L., Cincinnati.—Henry Miller of the Winter Garden, Philadelphia, Pa., is still living.

A. H. W., Cincinnati.—Read our variety summary in our next issue.

C. L., Chicago.—Apply to Boosey & Co., 32 E. 14th st., New York.

H. G. G., Philadelphia.—We do not compare the relative merits of professional performers in this department.

J. R. T., Kansas.—It is too early to guess. See our base-ball department.

READER, Sharo.—You win. 2 to 0 is better than 2 to 1.

P. B., Phila.—B is out on his turning up the second jack.

C. S., Phila.—That player wins who was first to call out.

H. C., St. Louis.—A wins, 3 to 0 being more than double.

W. W. B.—Send a specimen. 2. Yes. 3. No.

A. C. B., Cincinnati.—Barry Sullivan is 52 years of age.

COLDWATER, Mich.—Private time is not public concern.

HONEY, Augusta, Ga.—Address Lotta, in care of Augustin Daly's theatre, this city.

C. and C., Cincinnati.—C cannot take in those cards.

D. and S.—He never had the best batting averages.

C. N. J., Fort Davis.—Both A and B "chip in."

R. L. S., Place of Deposit.—Each $6.84.

BARBER, Mount Holly.—Certainly it can.

G. E., Danbury.—We do not require it.

T. J. C., Chicago.—We have no record.

J. O. G., Pittsfield.—He is not dead.

HELL GATE.—The bet is a draw.

R. F. G., Philadelphia.—No.

HELEN and FRANKLIN.—Yes.

NO SIGNATURE.—A loses.

JAS. MARTIN.—Ten.

IT IS HIGH TIME that stern parents were made to realize the fact that there comes a time when their authority over their offspring ceases. Recently, a "brutal father" slapped his only daughter, and made her face tingle with pain—likewise with shame and mortification. But she understood herself, and comprehended the meaning of woman's rights; she had the old party arrested, she had him tried for assault, and she had him convicted, the Court ruling that, having attained the mature age of twenty-one, she was beyond his control. The cruel one was sentenced to two weeks' imprisonment. Long-suffering woman, the hour of thy redemption is nigh!

AT THE PHILADELPHIA BILLIARD TOURNAMENT, which closed there on Saturday night last, our young American Sexton "gathered them in," his gathering shots bringing down a bag full of game, and carrying consternation into the camp of the enemy, if we may be permitted to use warlike language, now that European powers are hatching up a dismemberment of Turkey. Although Sexton, through no fault of his own, was not permitted to capture the "Gaul" in Paris, that contest nerved him to take his "bitter-sweet" revenge on Vignaux's countrymen in Philadelphia.

THE PROPRIETORS of the Lafayette Restaurant, in the Centennial Grounds, claim that their charges for victuals are not only reasonable, but cheap! On the strength of this declaration, a hungry reporter took lunch at the Lafayette, and was charged thirty cents for one boiled potato! And there was half of his salary gone at a single lunch. A vigilance committee is talked of.

THE MERRY CHIRP of the masticating cow gives indication of the happiness of the docile animal as it chews its cud on the green; while the sanguine croakings of the hop-frog and the uncongenial dissertations of the bull-toad leave nothing to be desired by the lover of rural life.

THE MAN who used to tend door "down there" feels a little dissatisfied with the action of the House of Representatives in merging he duties of his office with those of the Sergeant-at-arms. Thinks they might have combined their *a*tter with his.

THE MUSTANG RACE ought to multiply, if the results of last week's "trial of endurance" go for anything. The endurance of the mustangs and their rider was great, but public endurance was greater.

DECORATION DAY falls on Tuesday of this week, and the roses and other flowers are all "on time," as if in sympathy with those who so beautifully pay tribute to the memory of the "loved and lost."

PHILADELPHIA cannot boast of possessing all the standards of the free; for there was Kosciusko, who, though not a very tall man, was nevertheless a great liberty Pole!

SOME TIME AGO the metropolitan dailies asserted that President Grant aimed to be Julius Cæsar, but it now appears that he is satisfied with a "Don."

A MAN who was cut in the vest informs us that although umbrellas are not often studied yet they are frequently poured over!

ABOUT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

The fine weather of the past week greatly improved the attendance at the Centennial Exhibition, and enabled the Commission to put the roadways in better condition, and to beautify the grounds generally. Statistics clearly prove that the number of visitors to the Philadelphia exhibition during the first two weeks exceeded those at the Vienna Exposition, for the same period, by three to one. The exhibition, in its entirety, is admitted to excel all others that have preceded it, and a desire to visit the great show is increasing everywhere. Appearances indicate that the number of visitors will steadily increase until the grand culminating point of Fourth-of-July week shall be reached, at which period, it is thought, the city of Philadelphia and its environs will be fully tested to accommodate the thousands of visitors, from every direction, who will gather to view the exhibition, and to witness and take part in the ceremonies incident to Centennial week.

The injudicious and extravagant charges made for refreshments within the grounds have had the effect to injure the prospects of restaurant proprietors; for the majority of visitors carry lunch along with them, and inaugurate family picnics in the shady spots adjacent to the exhibition buildings, and the high-price eating and refreshment saloons have a lonesome time of it. Outside the grounds the outlook is not much better. The large hotels have never been full since the night before the opening; in fact, the average number of guests has been so wretchedly small as to compel a curtailment of expenses in every department, forty employes having been discharged from one hotel in a single day. On more than one occasion the number of guests at dinner in one of the mammoth hotels near the main entrance to the exhibition grounds did not reach more than fifty. When it is remembered that these hotels were built and furnished to accommodate from three to five thousand guests, it is not very difficult to foot up the losses that have already attended the speculation. One of these caravansaries, from the business of which extraordinary financial results in the way of profits were anticipated, was, it is said, placed in charge of a receiver during the past week, in consequence of the failure of the concern to meet its liabilities. In addition to the hotels alluded to, there are hundreds of restaurants and other places of refreshment along Belmont and Elm avenues, very few of which have taken in more than sufficient to pay expenses, while the majority of them have lost money. But fine weather and an increased attendance may improve business as the season progresses; but that the expectations indulged in by enthusiastic and overconfident caterers will be realized is not now considered probable. The truth is, there are far too many of these places for the number of visitors who remain outside of the grounds, or who may seek for refreshments before going in and after coming out. The opening-day was an extraordinary occasion, and hotel proprietors and saloon-keepers were unable to meet the demands made upon them by the hungry crowd. This spasm buoyed up the hopes of one and all, and a continuance of such business was looked for; but a day or two sufficed to destroy their castles in the air, and so, "hope deferred maketh the heart sick." We regret that those who have put their faith in speculative ventures born of the Centennial have not met with better encouragement; but some of them "may be happy yet." One lesson has been taught those who sought to impose their extortionate rates upon the public, and that is, that "honesty is the best policy," and that fair dealing between man and man cannot fail to lead to success.

TO PEOPLE who think they can drive along the matrimonial road without "ceremony" we tender this advice: "Keep to the rite!"

PEDESTRIANISM.

CHALLENGES TO WESTON.—Since the great walk at Agricultural Hall, London, Eng., wherein Vaughan covered 120 miles in 23 hours 45 minutes, and Howes and Crossland both excelled E. P. Weston's best twenty-four hours' performance at the same place, challenges are being aimed at the latter from various directions. The most noticeable is one from R. Lewis, of Liverpool, who will engage to run Weston three hundred miles for £100 to £500 a side, each to pay equal share of expenses, and take equal share of profit, or the winner to take all. This is undoubtedly issued on behalf of Vaughan; but there is no likelihood of its being accepted, Weston finding a convenient loophole for escape in the announcement, heretofore made, that he never bets, nor walks for stakes. We herewith quote two others, however, to which this will not apply. First: "Crossfield of Sheffield will walk E. P. Weston from one hour to six days, for a bet, value £100. Should the last not suit, he will walk the American to see who shall give £100 to any charity the latter may like to name; and if that is not good enough, Crossland will walk him for love and the honor of Old England. He hopes Weston will no longer show the 'white feather,' but come to terms at once." Second: "A gentleman will give E. P. Weston £200 if he can beat Vaughan's record. Another may like to pick, in a twenty-four hours' walk, or a man shall go against him for 500 miles, and the American can have a track to himself. As the amount of money paid to all of Weston's competitors put together did not amount to £100, it is to be hoped that he will accept this liberal offer."

WHEN H. VAUGHAN of Chester, Eng., returned home after walking the greatest recorded distance in twenty-four hours, he was met with an enthusiastic reception from several thousands who had assembled to do honor to him. The horses were taken from a carriage provided for his use, and the conveyance was drawn through the city by about threescore men, preceded by a band.

JAMES MAGUIRE, a cobbler of Ipswich, Eng., 5ft. 9in. in height, attempted to walk 1111 miles in 24h. at the Hendon Recreation Grounds, Sunderland, Eng., May 8, 9, but only covered 100m. 800yds. He had received no special preparation.

FORTY AMATEURS contended in a twenty-five-mile walking contest, for a claret jug given by the honorary secretary of the London Athletic Club, at Lillie Bridge, London, Eng., May 6. J. Berry (L. A. C.) won by 1,750yds. in 4h. 2min. Mace; W. M. Green (L. A. C.), second, 4:13:13; A. Norman, third, 4:15:51; W. E. Fuller (T. H. & H.), fourth, 4:16:57. The winner walked the first mile in 9:09, and two miles in 18:45. Eleven beat 4h. 30min., and no fewer than thirty became entitled to silver medals offered by the Thames Hare and Hounds Club to competitors completing the distance in five hours. W. Waddell, judge and referee; T. Griffith, timekeeper.

GEORGE HAZAEL not being able, on account of his Scotch engagements, to carry out his intention to attempt, on May 22, to beat the best times on record from ten to twelve miles, running, for prizes offered by the Amateur Athletic Club, the date has been postponed till June 19, which will give the ten mile champion ample time to get thoroughly fit. The trial will take place at Lillie Bridge, London, and as he, in an attempt to beat the ten-mile record, in March last, covered the distance in 52:21⅘, in the face of a strong wind, it is reasonable to expect that, with favorable weather, he will succeed in his undertaking.

CLARKE, who in January last walked 7¼ miles in 58m. 22s., and previously to that time had covered 80 miles in 9h. 24m. 16½s., attempted to accomplish 7½ miles in an hour at the Prince of Wales Club, London, Eng., May 6, but lost by 1m. 25⅘s. He walked the first mile in 7:30⅗.

THE ARRANGEMENTS for the handicap races to take place on the Olympic B. B. grounds, Paterson, N. J., June 5, under the management of Jas. Turner, are completed, and it is expected they will be the finest ever had in that neighborhood.

THE BICYCLE IN ENGLAND.—Some idea may be formed of the popularity which the bycicle has attained in England as a means of locomotion and amusement when it is known that, at the annual meeting and parade of different clubs in and around London, held at Rosebery Park, Hampton Court, on Saturday, May 6, nearly 480 riders were on hand, of whom 407 took part in the procession, 72 being from the London B. C. All kinds of machines were used, from the now almost obsolete 36-inch roadster to the 60-inch racer, and the route taken was to the left of Hampton Green to Hampton, passing through Bushey Park, coming through which a grand sight presented itself to the numerous spectators who had assembled to witness this immense gathering of bicyclists teaming between the magnificent avenue of chestnut trees. The Coventry Company alone is said to turn out something like one hundred machines a week.

ST. GEORGE VS. MERION.—The first regular cricket match this season will take place at Hoboken, N. J., on May 31, when the Merion eleven of Philadelphia will meet the eleven of the St. George Club at the Hoboken cricket field, foot of Ninth street.

THE FIRST of the rifle matches for the selection of an Irish team to go to Philadelphia was held at Dundalk, Ireland, May 27. The weather was boisterous. The best scores were as follows: Rigby, 150; Johnson, 135; Goff, 135.

THE CENTENNIAL TOURNAMENT.

Sexton wins First Prize, Garnier Second, and Slosson Third—Six Unparalleled "Grand Averages."

The results of Games Nos. 23 and 24 were last week given by telegraph, the last game reported in detail having been No. 22, played on Saturday night, May 20. We now give the scores of Games 23 and 24, together with that of every one of their successors.

GAME NO. 23—RUDOLPHE VS. BESSUNGER.

Played Monday afternoon, May 22. Bessunger led up to the 17th inning, after which Rudolphe exhibited great steadiness, and Bessunger was eventually beaten 125 points. The winner's average was 11.3-37, and the loser's 8.3-4. Of the four losers on this day, Bessunger was the only one who reached the end of the first string. Referee, Chris. Bird.

THE PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAIGN.

East vs. West.

The interest in the fight between single clubs for the League pennant of late seems to have been superceded by the more important issue of the West vs. East. The public have, during the past week, looked more at the aggregate result of the contests which have taken place, rather than to the simple record as to which single club takes the lead. The first week's play of this portion of the season's programme wherein the West and the East have tried conclusions, has ended as follows:

EAST.	Won.	Lost.	WEST.	Won.	Lost.
Boston	3	0	Chicago	2	1
Hartford	1	2	St. Louis	2	1
Athletic	1	2	Louisville	2	1
Mutual	1	2	Cincinnati	1	0
	—	—		—	—
Totals	6	6	Totals	6	6

By the above record it will be seen that the fight has been thus far even, though but for the defeat sustained by the St. Louis—which cannot be justly claimed as a playing victory for the East—the West would have led by one game. Let us now see how they stand by the record of earned runs and first-base hits:

EAST.	Earned 1st b. Runs.	Hits.	WEST.	Earned 1st b. Runs.	Hits.
Boston	0	6	Cincinnati	0	2
Boston	2	4	Cincinnati	2	3
Boston	3	14	Cincinnati	1	13
Hartford	4	12	Chicago	5	13
Hartford	2	8	Chicago	0	4
Hartford	1	9	Chicago	4	12
Athletic	0	2	Louisville	0	7
Athletic	0	9	Louisville	4	12
Athletic	2	13	Louisville	0	5
Mutual	0	8	Louisville	0	8
Mutual	0	8	St. Louis	2	19
Mutual	0	5	St. Louis	0	2
Mutual	1	7	St. Louis	0	6
Totals	19	121	Totals	18	125

From the above figures it will be seen that the East leads slightly in earned runs, and the West in base-hits. Take it altogether the contest is very close, neither section having much to boast of beyond the fact that thus far their leading team heads the list for pennant championship, as per the appended record of games played to May 27, inclusive, shows:

	Games Played.	Games Won.	Games Lost.	Games Drawn.
Chicago	15	12	3	0
Hartford	13	10	3	0
Boston	14	9	5	0
St. Louis	14	9	5	0
Louisville	15	6	9	1
Athletic	15	5	9	1
Mutual	14	4	10	0
Cincinnati	15	3	12	0
	116	58	58	2

ATHLETIC vs. LOUISVILLE.

The Athletics and Louisvilles met for the second time on May 25 on the former's ground, Philadelphia, the contest in question being one of the most extraordinary in the annals of the game, as the unprecedented number of fourteen innings were played with the score remaining a blank—a blankness of the most unvarying of a nature as indefinite a number of innings more. About one thousand spectators were present on this occasion. The Athletics played the same nine as in the preceding game, being still weakened by Sutton's absence, while the Louisvilles strengthened their nine by the return to the ball-field of Manager Chapman in Ryan's place. The game did not commence until nearly half an hour past the appointed time, in consequence of the difficulty in agreeing upon an umpire. George Heubel finally being chosen, the Louisvilles went to first to bat, and succeeded in the third inning in scoring a run, Hastings having led off with a clean hit; and, after Knight's muff of Malone's good throw had given him a life at second base, he came home on Devlin's high hit that Hall badly missed in his overanxiety to make a double-play. The Athletics in this inning had an excellent opportunity to make a couple of runs at the least; but by bad coaching they threw their chances away, and were retired without scoring. Knight had led off with a safe single-baser; but, imprudently attempting to run home on Zettlein's batting hit down to the left-field fence, was easily put out, the latter directly afterwards being caught napping by a bit of sharp practice on the part of Hague, who concealed the ball about him until Zettlein walked off the base and then touched him. It was not until the seventh inning that the Athletics managed to obtain their first run, and thus tie their opponents' score, Hall being the fortunate individual, having made a good hit, and, after Fulmer had lost an easy chance to "double up," he came home amidst great enthusiasm on Zettlein's safe hit to right field. The excitement was at fever-heat when the eighth, ninth, and even the tenth innings were played without a run being scored by either side, the Louisvilles being put out in one-two-three order, while Hall and Malone were left one after making good hits in the eleventh inning, after two of the Louisvilles had been retired, Meyerle missed Hague on a foul-fly, and, encouraged by this let-off, he made a two-base hit, Devlin following with another two-baser that brought Hague home; but Devlin, endeavoring to come home on Gerhardt's good hit to centre field, was put out on the home-plate, the ball being quickly fielded in by Eggler. The enthusiasm was great when the Athletics tied the score, Meyerle being given a lift at the outset only to be forced at second by Malone, who then advanced one base on Coons, out at first base. Much was expected from Hall, who had been batting finely; but he popped up a ball to short left-field that Fulmer badly missed, and Malone, by desperate running, came from second home. The twelfth, thirteenth and fourteenth innings resulted in both nines being blanked, Fulmer being the only one to reach first-base, which he did by a good hit. As it was now rapidly growing dark, the umpire called the game, the score being the unprecedented one of a tie at two runs each after four-teen innings had been completed.

LIVE OAK vs. STAR.

The game played at Lynn, Mass., May 27, between the Live Oaks and the Syracuse (N. Y.) Stars was particularly interesting to residents of that section from the fact that Manager Brackett of last year's Oaks, together with Madden, McGlynn, Dorgan, Adams and Crosscup of the Oak nine of '75 are now members of the Star Club. The players named have many friends in the shoemaking town, and so confident were they that the local team would suffer defeat that they were loud in their offers to bet odds upon the result. The home-nine had troops of friends on the grounds (about 1,500 spectators in all being present), and they cheerfully accepted the odds given, though unwilling to bet anywhere near even up. The result was a complete surprise, even to the Oaks themselves, they winning by a score of 8 to 3, and even then the runs secured by the losers were got off wild pitches by Bradley, who retired after the third inning on account of a lame arm, Stratton taking his place, and, though he never pitched before, the Stars failed to make a base off him. The score:

ATHLETIC vs. LOUISVILLE.

These clubs played their third championship game May 27 on the grounds of the former in Philadelphia. Although the weather was bright and pleasant, the attendance was smaller than at the preceding three games, this in a measure being due to the disastrous defeat sustained by the Athletics on the preceding day. The glorious uncertainty of the game was plainly shown on this occasion by the Athletics decisively defeating the Louisvilles by the score of 9 to 0, whereas on the preceding day the Louisvilles had found no difficulty in winning by the one-sided score of 16 to 8. A delay of some fifteen minutes ensued, consequent upon the unwillingness of the Louisvilles to accept anyone as umpire but Hatfield, who was, however, finally agreed upon. The story of the contest in question is soon told. The Athletics, finding no trouble in hitting Devlin, ran up their score to nine, while the Louisvilles were unable to punish Zettlein with any effect, and were retired with nine blanks. Fine hits by Hall, Knight, and Eggler earned the first run for the Athletics in the second inning, and they followed this up in the fourth inning by scoring another earned run by the good batting of Coons, Knight, and Zettlein. The fifth inning of the Athletics settled the question of victory, as, after two were out, errors by Hague, Carbine and Sommerville, followed by six clean hard hits, yielded no less than six more runs. Two men were also out in the Athletics' sixth inning, when Coons made a beautiful hit to left-centre for two bases, and was brought home by Hall's splendid three-base hit to right field, he earning another run. Eggler, Meyerle and Knight led off with clean hits in each of the last three innings of the Athletics, but were "doubled-up" in a couple of instances at second and first bases by Sommerville's good fielding. In the last two innings of the Louisvilles, Devlin and Bechtel alone made clean hits, only to be forced out in each case by the hits of the next strikers that Force finely fielded. Sommerville and Fulmer in the seventh and Eggler and Chapman in the ninth inning were also credited with clean hits, the game being closed by a double-play made by Zettlein's purposely missing Sommerville's weak high hit. A remarkable and noteworthy incident of this game was the fact of the three strikers of the Athletics in the third inning being put out on the first three balls pitched, this being the shortest inning on record.

ATHLETIC vs. LOUISVILLE. Playing Off their Tie-game.

The Athletics and Louisvilles played off their fourteen-innings tie-game on the following day, May 27, after short notice and the limited publicity given to the fixture led to a smaller attendance than was anticipated, over one thousand persons, however, being present. The Louisvilles made another change in their nine, Carbine taking Gerhardt's place at first base, the latter having left Louisville to proceeded to Washington on a matrimonial venture. Again another dispute ensued about the umpire, the Louisvilles holding out for Mason of the Philadelphias, who was finally accepted. The Louisvilles again lost the toss, and, going to the bat, opened with a fine safe single-base hits that yielded them four runs—two earned—and they followed this up in the second inning by making another run, Snyder and Hague being credited with two basers. A couple of errors by Fulmer gave the Athletics their first run in the second inning. Knight pitched instead of Zettlein in the third inning, but the change proved to be of no effect, the Louisvilles hitting him even harder than they did Zettlein; and so, after seven runs had been made in this inning, Zettlein resumed the position for the remainder of the game. In the last six innings the Louisvilles scored four runs, errors by Knight, Meyerle and Malone preventing any of these runs from being earned. The Athletics, after scoring singles in the fifth and sixth innings by errors of Sommerville and Hague, managed to get the hang of Devlin's pitching in the eighth inning, making no less than five runs on six clean hard hits and a bad throw of Fulmer's. This made the totals assume a less one-sided appearance. The Louisvilles batted remarkably well throughout, and thus won a decisive victory. Hall's fine fielding and batting were the most noteworthy features of the Athletics' play.

THE VANISHED SPECTRE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY H. COFFEY.

"Will the spectre walk to-night, my lord?" the anxious actor said,
And smiled upon the manager, the pompous figure-head,
The "boss" of all the "bosses," who could "read his title clear"
To the "grandest aggregation put upon the road this year."

"Oh, yes; he'll walk, be sure of that," the manager replied,
"We're makin' money; all the other circuses are 'snyde';"
Whereupon he went, and nervously the circus-tent did scan,
And with smiles of satisfaction walked out "to see a man."

The "grand entree" was over, the elephant had stood
Upon the lofty pedestal, La Sylphide sweet had rode
Her dashing act, and nimbly jumped o'er garter, bar and banner,
And through the hearts of country swains in the most outlandish manner.

There was vaulting over horses, and a brace of merry fools
Made it lively for the "Rubens" when they introduced the mules.
The show was out, the crowd dispersed with jest and merry talk,
While the anxious actors waited for the Ghost's expected walk.

Long and wearily they waited, but no manager appeared;
Then the high-trapeze performer suggested that they "cheered,"
Which suggestion was accepted as a means of prompt relief,
Though circumstances made it that the "balls" were very brief.

Who is it rushes in and gives the door a fearful bang?
Who is that is pounced upon by this assembled gang?
The treasurer, with clothes awry and almost out of breath,
And a look upon his countenance denoting "scared to death!"

"The manager has bounced the town and took the blunt," he tells;
At this there rose upon the air some most unearthly yells.
"How will we pay the hash-mill? Our baggage will be goupled!"
And the landlord think us beats and have the whole caboodle nabbed.

We'll have to take the railroad-ties and have our boots "chalked."
Oh, d—n the man that fooled us!—if that Ghost had only walked."

THROUGH A KEYHOLE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY PEARL ETTINGE.

"Think, think, think,
To a most insane degree,
And I would that my tongue could utter
The thoughts that arise in me."

I slammed the door and locked it.

I had walked home from the theatre, with the preconceived intention of slamming that door, and then saying a dreadful word! but at the cue for the ensemble climax, courage and breath simultaneously failed me, and, much to my own disgust, I wound up by a decidedly weak flood of tears.

There was a tiny, bright fire in a tiny, bright grate, a pair of red curtains, a cheap but cheerful carpet, and some bits of ivy and geranium growing in vases here together, a dear little room, and I ought to have been very thankful, but I wasn't.

I couldn't sleep—there was no use trying. Tired and cross, I flung myself upon a small chintz-covered lounge, and prepared to follow the advice given that memorable row of history: "Consider, cow, consider." Money and how to obtain it; that was the question. I did not live in Washington, I had no relatives in Congress, I was not making anything for the Centennial; consequently my knowledge might be termed limited.

The second walking lady had appeared that night in a new and gorgeous costume. The leader of the ballet pirouetted for the first time in a golden wig of voluminous fluffiness, elegant to behold, and my pink silk. Oh, I forgot to mention I was doing light "juvenile" at the Nautinn Theatre—salary twenty dollars a week. As I was about to say, my pink silk had arrived at that extreme state of dinginess pitiable to gaze upon. All this was enough to keep any ordinary girl awake, and I was an ordinary girl.

The popular performance at the Nautinn Theatre was close upon its one hundredth night. Everybody would appear in new dresses—everybody except me—not that it made any difference. I had possessed dramatic aspirations once; but they were buried forever. My fate had been sealed by the lady who did the emotional business. She was a stout person, with a very double chin and a great deal of color, who had been "going to star it next season, my dear," for the past fifteen years.

Rather, as the glasses, as she stood at the wings, she remarked superciliously:

"The gyrl has ability, no doubt, but," this with immense satisfaction, "she ne-var can amount to anything—she's mu-uch too small."

Now all, these things were enough to quench anybody's ardor, and I was quenched "demnibly," as Mr. Mantalini observes.

At this point of affairs it would be as well to state that the sofa on which I was pursuing my retrospection was placed against a door, which separated my room from the next; in fact, was so situated as to bring the keyhole in close proximity to my left auricular organ. Said room was occupied by an enfeebled author and artist, whom I had never met, but who frequently made night hideous by elocuting far into the wee sma' hours. On this particular occasion the vague repinings in which I was taking peculiar and womanly satisfaction were constantly interrupted by an animated conversation apparently held between the Incipient and some boon companion, for such was the wakeful nature.

Hailing with enthusiasm upon a story just finished by him, which he contemplated sending to some leading paper.

Friend expressed a desire to hear it; Incipient was charmed, of course, and prepared to elocute. Well, it was quite interesting to me under the circumstances, and you shall be allowed to write out a full confession of your sin, under the thrilling title "THROUGH A KEYHOLE."

WHEN YOUR AUNT COMES TO VISIT YOU.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER,
BY CHARLES H. DAY.

It is very jolly when your aunt comes to visit you, and it is nice that she brings with her the pretty daughter. You find by a remarkable coincidence that your aunt admires the same poets and authors that you do. She is familiar with their names and their works, for she has read them from end to end, and does not know them by reading their titles on the back of bindings or in book catalogues.

Your aunt has got a superb conception of the Indicrous—she can say apt things, good things, and funny things. When the great round moon sends a flood of light on the icy surface of the lake she remarks:

"It makes the stars wish to see the moon so full in the face."

Your aunt is full of anecdotes, a sort of female "Sunset" Cox, Artemus Ward and Joe Miller, and can relate a thousand and one stories about early men and women and children, especially children; every child she ever knew must have been bright, sharp and chipper, and in journeying through life she must have come in contact with more than her share of those odd people who are always making absurd lingual blunders.

During the war your uncle picked up the morning paper and said:

"Buglers wanted for the — Regiment" in this wise: "Burglars wanted;" and when he had read thus far he added: "What do they want burglars for in the army?"

And then your aunt put in:

"To steal their hearts."

Quite good for your aunt, and excusable on the part of your uncle, because he was not wearing his spectacles.

Your aunt is an amateur M. D., and almost as skillful in dosing with simple remedies as your grandmother, and that venerable good creature knows more good common-sense remedies for trivial ailments than a medical clinique.

When little Johnny came over into your aunt's yard, demolishing a stick of red and white candy striped liked a barber's pole, she says:

"Johnny, you shouldn't eat so much candy; it isn't good for a little boy; it will give you worms."

Johnny takes the sweet morsel out of his mouth long enough to speak:

"Well, if I get worms, then I'll go a-fishing."

An hour thereafter Johnny was in bed, dosed with sage tea. Too much candy or too much brain?

Did you ever say a sharp thing to an Irishman or a child, and fail to get an answer that was as keen as a knife or as sharp as vinegar?

Jones lived in the house next to one of aunt's little friends, who was running home from school in a heavy fall of rain.

"This is fine weather for young ducks," shouted Jones.

"Yes," replied the little duck, "and for old cabbage-heads, too."

Jones went in out of the rain to reflect, and little girl hurried home to read her Sunday-school book.

Blessed be the man who invented the dollar store and the chromo, but your aunt raises one objection against them when you have purchased a vase or a framed picture to present to a friend—most of the stuff purchased at the dollar store is bought to give away—the pretty girl behind the counter does up the article in a wrapper bearing the prominent advertisement, "From the $ Store," and, as you walk down the principal promenade, the prominent trademark, $, can be seen a block off, and every woman you meet who has been there herself turns up her nose.

But your aunt has the laugh on her side when the identical woman who retrousses her nasal organ the most walks into a fancy-goods store and asks for:

"A spool of black linen cotton."

Your aunt owns a neat bit of property in the city. There is a fine house in the city. Did you ever know of a city where there was not a ring? Every year ambitious young men leave the plow and newcomers the hod to seek a fortune among bricks and mortar. They get into politics, get contracts and plan city improvements.

The way to plan a city improvement is this: You widen a street or raise it or lower it to your own benefit or the injury of your neighbors, and they pay for it. You get the contract and divide with the powers that be.

You remark to your aunt that her property has been a good deal improved by the change. She responds:

"Yes, I expect to be improved into the poorhouse shortly. I have had street-widenings, and changes of grade, putting-down of pavements and sidewalks," and then in an outburst of honest indignation exclaims: 'They have built a sewer on three sides of me, and I don't know how soon it will be before they will put one through the back yard."

Your aunt has noted the fact that after all these improvements are completed and you are able to go in and out of the house without falling into the sewer or breaking your neck over a pile of bricks, cobble stones or flagging, along come the gasmen and watermen and dig up their mains, bringing more filth into and on your floor.

About this time a man with a patent concrete walk or a new pavement appears before the Common Council, and prays for further improvements, making improvements internal, almost eternal, and quite infernal.

When you write a letter to your aunt she lays in wait for it, and sends your cousin to the post-office at the arrival of every mail. Even if one don't get a letter at every mail, you do not feel entirely desolate if you only get a postal card or an invitation to invest in a lottery scheme; but it makes one all alone in the world, so to seem, when Wooding the postmaster thumbs over the missives half-way down the pile in his hands, as a great condescension, or, if busy reading a political leader or the report of a ward meeting, snaps out, without even so much as looking:

"Nothing."

You are a prompt correspondent, and your aunt knows it; and when Coz comes back and reports nothing, her mother won't believe it, and she puts on her bonnet and just gets down to the post-office in a hurry.

She walks right up to the window in the post-office, like Anna Dickinson to the footlights—she means business, and she mentions her cognomen in a sort of "My name is Norval" way of speaking.

Way down at the bottom of the pile there is a letter; it was there yesterday. It isn't a warm day, but your relative's hot; she takes a liberty with the name of the postmaster:

"Why don't the Government put in a wooden postmaster and done with it?"

Wooding apologizes in vain.

Your aunt avers that, if post-office officials spent less time in reading newspapers that pass through the mails, the subscribers would be thankful and they would have more time to attend to their duties—that is, when asked for a letter, look and see before reporting "Nothing."

Your aunt likes boys, she always did; when she was a girl she liked them. It requires a good deal of effort to like a boy; he chalks valentines on your front door-step, and throws his ball through the parlor window, breaking a pane of glass; he torments the dog and worries the cat. The average boy is as cunning as he is cruel.

The boy who affixes a string to your door-pull and conceals himself behind the tree, or fastens a catgut across the walk for you to trip over, may be a young Franklin or a Whitney or a Fulton, and it might be well to encourage his inventive genius with a bit of rawhide or ratan.

Where is inspiration sometimes in ratan; ask the schoolmaster.

"Auntie, was Bill Tweed a great man?" asked a boy-nephew.

She explained to him the malfeasance in office of "the Boss," and how he had appropriated as his own others' millions.

Nephew had read of a boy, who, on hearing of the greatness of John Hancock, and how he signed the Declaration of Independence, exclaimed:

"I would have done the same thing as John Hancock if I had been there."

That boy was warmly applauded for his patriotism, and his saying was made a paragraph of in the paper.

When nephew had listened attentively and learned all that his aunt was disposed to tell him about "Bir Six," he exclaimed:

"Bully for Bill Tweed; I'd done the same as he did if I had been there!"

That youngster's life is rich with promise.

Your aunt makes so many remarks during her visit that it is quite impossible to chronicle them.

She says that when a lady whom she knows has made fair to look upon goes into a drygoods store to look at all the new goods and buy a paper of needles, "Sharp's, 5 to 10," the sweet young men behind the counter think that she's struck with wonder at their good looks—she is not—she only wonders why they are not traveling with Barnum this season.

There are more baboons behind counters than in menageries.

Your aunt has been to a fashionable church, where the sexton is got up regardless, and looks like a floor-manager at a fancy-dress ball, or a billiard-champion just after winning a diamond cue. The first time she wore a sealskin coat and solitaire diamonds in her ears, and was given a very prominent seat in the main body of the church; the next time she came in modest attire, without sealskin or diamonds, and she was waved to a seat near the door, where she could have heard the word if she had been provided with a hearing-trumpet.

Your aunt wants to know if it will be so hereafter, sealskin and diamonds in the front seats?

Your aunt wants to know why it is that the members of the Sewing Circle charitable societies never aid anyone at a nearer distance than three thousand miles, and what good mismated rubbers and old boots and shoes and moth-eaten clothes can do the heathen?

Your aunt's missionary work comes nearer home, and sometimes it is not necessary to go off the block to do a good action. But then it isn't reported in the papers or the "annual report." She knows that the world is an awful wicked one, but she don't snivel over it, but tries to make it the better for being in it herself.

A smiling face and a kind word are as welcome in life as a beacon in the dark.

You are sorry when your aunt's visit comes to an end; you appreciate her chunks of wisdom and fun galore, but you know that she "can't be with you always;" and, further, that when she comes again she will have another store of repartee, jollity and sound sense.

Your aunt goes through the world with her eyes and ears open, and that is the reason why she is such goodly company, and the cause of your mourning her departure.

She enjoys fun, wit and good humor, and knows to a nicety where the laugh comes in, and believes, as in Proverbs, that "laughter is medicine for the heart."

After her departure you rehearse all her anecdotes and laugh again at the queer and quaint remarks of her little friends, and in her absence look about you for little boys and girls who say bright things, and wonder where it is that she meets all her smart little friends.

Now and again you stumble upon a man or woman who is a laughable bull, and you resolve to bear it in mind till the next coming of your relative, and when she does come you make haste to relate it, omitting nothing but—the point.

The most important part of a story to recollect is the point.

If the reader can't see the point of this one, ask her WHEN YOUR AUNT COMES TO VISIT YOU.

OPERATIC AND DRAMATIC NOVELTIES ABROAD.

"DIMITRI,"

a five-act grand opera, by Victoria Joncieres, was produced with great success on the opening night of the Theatre National Lyrique, Paris, France, May 5. The correspondent of The (London) Era thus speaks of it:

It is from the united pens of Henri de Bornier, author of "La Fille de Roland," and Armand Silvestre, the subject having been originally suggested, we are told, by M. Carvalho, the history of the False Demetrius, who pretended son of Ivan the Terrible, is well known. This mysterious impostor flitted across the annals of the Muscovite Czars in the beginning of the 17th century, was lifted to the throne by an improvised army, and, after remaining there for eleven months, fell a victim to the axes and knives of a revolted mob. The curtain rises on the banks of the Don, where a band of Cossacks are encamped beside a convent, the prior of which wears a suit of mail under his monkish garb. A young man named Vasili presents himself before him. This Vasili, who later on becomes the hero who gives the title to the story, is an apostate monk, and he has come to relate to his former religious chief the history of his wanderings, and to solicit his advice. He had become attached to Vanda, a cousin of Sigismund, King of Poland, and had renounced orders for her sake. One day, however, he meets the beautiful Marina, the affianced bride of the Count Sandomir, calls deeply in love with her, and inspires her with an equal affection. A duel with the Count follows, and Vasili kills his rival. He is immediately arrested and thrown into prison. While awaiting the death sentence he is delivered from captivity by Vanda, and as he is leaving his place of confinement a letter from her is put into his hand, in which she enjoins him to return at once to the monastery, there to await further revelation. The only advice which the good prior can offer in return for this confidence is to suggest to Vasili to pray to God "at the foot of the altar." At that moment a band of pilgrims appears, among the throng of which Vasili, who had fled from the paternal roof on hearing of her lover's imprisonment, and had since wandered about the country in a state of distraction, sees Marina. They ask and obtain permission to enter the convent, and Marina rejoins her gipsy companions. And then a feeble glimpse of the coming plot is afforded us. The Count de Lusace arrives at a neighboring château, and summons the abbess to ask him if he remembers a child whom fifteen years previously he had mysteriously confided to his charge, and to whom they had given the name of Vasili, leaving him in ignorance of his birth-rank. The Count then declares that he is no other than Dimitri, the son of Ivan the Terrible, and consequently heir to the throne which is at present occupied by the usurper, Boris. The news is imparted to Vasili, and then by him to Marina, whom it astounds and frightens, for she cannot imagine herself worthy to be the wife of the Czar. But Dimitri, as he is now to be called, reassures her, and bids her go to the Castle of Viksa, where his mother, Ivan's widow, the Czarina Marpha, is kept prisoner by Boris. He tells his mistress to convey to Marpha the tidings of his escape and approaching resurrection and he will soon come to her aid. The second act takes place in Vanda's palace at Cracow. This woman, whose passion for Vasili has never diminished, is about to present him to King Sigismund, the Czar of Russia, and to implore her cousin's aid to restore him his throne. The King and Dimitri enter, and Vanda, after making her request, also asks from Sigismund to bestow her hand on Dimitri. The young man is amazed, and is about to protest, when Lusace restrains him. This man is deeply ambitious, and, with Dimitri on the Muscovite throne, having Vanda for his wife, looks forward to being virtually the Czar, for he holds Vanda in his power. He threatens Dimitri that Marina is in Boris' power at Viksa, and that by a word he, Lusace, can bring about her death, and Dimitri yields, and the King and Queen of Poland offers him his support to reconquer his crown. The third act conducts us to the prison where the Czarina Marpha is confined. Despite the assertions of Marina, the poor mother does not believe that her son is dead. But when the Archbishop of Moscow comes as an emissary from Boris demanding that she should denounce the impostor, Marpha's fortitude overcomes all her doubts, and generates a fond belief in the existence of Dimitri. In the second scene of this act we find ourselves in the camp of the Pretender, who is laying siege to Moscow. The death of Boris is announced, and the inhabitants ask for a truce. To celebrate this a ballet is introduced, very striking and characteristic, one of the brightest features in the opera. The fourth act opens in the Kremlin, and presents the spectacle of the Czar's wedding to Marina, who declares his ultimatum. Either Dimitri must espouse Vanda, or Lusace must wed the latter's daughter. Marina is not, as he imagines, the real Dimitri, but the son of a serf whom the Count had substituted for the royal child. Blind with rage, Dimitri plunges a dagger into the Count's breast, thus killing him, as he supposes, the false monarch. Then he implores Marpha to recognize him as her son, and she, though still doubting, at last consents to do so. The last act represents the entry of Dimitri into Moscow. The curtain rises on the interior of one of the courts of the Kremlin, on one side the Palace, and on the other the Cathedral. Lusace had not died, we find, by the young Czar's hand, but is living, and ready with Vanda—who now hates Dimitri as sincerely as she had formerly loved him—to revenge themselves on the impostor they have elevated to the throne. Lusace moves among the people that Vasili pursues, and Dimitri is a mere adventurer, and, while the new Czar and Marina sing a delicious love duet on the balcony of the palace, a hissing head is thrown at Vanda's feet, and revalling in piteous tones the death of her affections. A grand procession emerges from the palace-gates, conducting Dimitri to his coronation. The Archbishop appears on the Cathedral steps, and summons Marpha to show, as soon the holy book whether the Czar is in reality her son. The unhappy woman hesitates, but at last, summoning up sudden resolution, she declares that the ring which is on her fingers touch the sacred page a shot from an arquebus penetrates Dimitri's heart. Lusace had made his way to one of the palace-windows, and had thus avenged himself and Vanda.

The cast included Duchesne as Dimitri, Mlle. Zina Dalti as Marina, and Comte as the Prior.

"BROUGHT TO BOOK,"

a new drama, by G. H. Macdermott, was produced at the Britannia Theatre, London, Eng., May 8, the author appearing in the leading character. It was his first appearance since his return from America.

We find in the commencement that a Colonel Carleton is anxious to obtain possession of the hand and fortune of Lady Clarendon, a widow, but has, or rather was, a small obstacle in the way in the shape of a boy, Sir Clarence Carleton. To further his purpose, Colonel Carleton has engaged a Captain O'Connor, who is employed as gardener in Carleton Manor; but he has been watched by Ralph Redburne, who, having already done some dirty work for the Colonel, suspects his employer of playing him false, and puts a watch on the latter. This leads him through a secret door, he discovers the mystery of the will, and determines to turn his knowledge to account. He has an interview with the Colonel, and speaks his mind as freely as such persons are accustomed to do in melodramatic pieces. He has also an old grudge against the Carleton family, and, becoming very insulting to Lady Carleton, her young son, Sir Clarence, fiercely retorts, upon which Ralph makes an attack upon the young heir. But at this moment a friend of the family—everybody's friend, in fact—Captain O'Connor, arrives, and speedily overcomes the would-be murderer, who, still plotting with the Colonel, endeavors to induce him to destroy the young heir. The Colonel, who is a sanguine but cowardly, reluctantly consents, and agrees that the signal for the deed to be done shall be his carving the letter "C" upon an old willow-tree at a romantic spot called the Black Pool. But a singular coincidence is introduced—Captain O'Connor is in love with Winifred Wentworth, who cannot make up her mind, but whose heart has long been the Captain's. She promises when she has decided to cut the letter "C" on the willow-tree. What follows may be expected as naturally as that night will follow day. The villain Ralph comes to the spot, sees the letter "C," and takes instant precautions by throwing Master Clarence into the Black Pool from a rustic bridge. Not, however, without the act being witnessed. Captain O'Connor, who, by the by, is the rightful owner of the place between him and Ralph, ending in all three getting out of the Black Pool, but not ending the play, for the villain has yet much to do. The Colonel, who had not intended to proceed to such lengths in his scheme, is astounded to hear that he has made away with the boy. Matters become terribly complicated, and the excitement of the audience is intense when a tit-bit scene is shown, which by a mechanical contrivance exhibits the inside and outside of Ralph Redburne's cottage in an instant, so that we are familiar with a double set of incidents taking place at the same period. Winifred, anxious for the safety of the Captain, watches the cottage, and, by singing a verse of the popular song "What Would You Do, Love?" warns her lover, who is kept a prisoner by Ralph's gang. The lover tells her what to do in another verse of the song; that is, to send for the soldiers, who, soon arriving, put an end to Ralph and his schemes, and all ends happily, the interest being enhanced by the fact that Lady Carleton is enabled to marry her lover, Walter Wentworth, and defeat the Colonel's treachery.

Mr. Macdermott appeared as Captain O'Connor, F. Charlton as Col. Carleton, E. Drayton as Ralph, Miss M. A. Bellair as Lady Clara, Miss Lizzie Dent as Sir Clarence, and Mrs. S. Lane as Winifred Wentworth.

"MAMMA,"

a comedy by Mrs. Chippendale, was recently first presented at the Gaiety Theatre, Dublin, Ireland.

It is in three acts. The first discovers Major Josselyn, a very old officer, in a quiet little villa, with four unmarried daughters, the youngest (Miss Willes), aged sixteen, a determined little lady, who will say what she thinks and feels without studying its propriety. The other three are marriageable. One of the girls is blind. Their happiness seems to be complete. Having always lived in retirement, the advent of an invitation to a neighboring castle for a garden party creates quite a stir in the little household, and reluctantly (a most delicious Chippendale) every one accepts. While the others go to consult about the dresses she retains her eldest daughter, and is about telling her some secret trouble that has tormented her for years, when the old lady returns, and the curtain falls. In the second act the party, with the accepted lovers of the two elder girls, are in a little garden outside their villa. A Mr. Cuddleback, for whom the blind girl had previously expressed his contempt, is also present. A Mr. Frostman puts in an appearance. He overhears the Major telling with great joy that he had induced his only son, who had gone to Australia, to return. Mr. Frostman informs him that his son will not dare to come to this country, and that neither his daughter nor his granddaughters will attempt, without his leave, to go to the ball, or he will reveal a secret that has been kept, and that will bring shame and disgrace on the family. The eldest girl appeals to the grandfather to compel Mr. Frostman to reveal the words, and Frostman informs him that he had loved his daughter and had been rejected; that he had spoken to his son, who was his apprentice, and his assistance was accompanied by a blow; that the son had committed forgery; that he did not arrest him, but sought him in his house; that in the sister's anguish he made a promise to keep the secret on condition of his leaving the country, and of his having the ruling hand in her future life. The old Major appeals to his daughter, who confirms the story, and he falls senseless at Frostman's feet. Act 3 finds us a fortnight later in the old room. The Major has recovered; the lovers, having learned the state of affairs, had been banished for a fortnight to see if it would alter their views. They have just come back fuller than ever of love. The old Major, in answer to the pleading of his family, refuses to acknowledge his son, but, with Frostman filled with remorse, he consents, and a happy meeting ensues.

THE word "derrick" is an Americanism, and yet it had its origin in England. Early in the seventeenth century, when the office of hangman in England was no sinecure, one Derrick held the place, and among Puritans and Cavaliers alike, his name became associated with the gallows. The Puritans brought the word hither, and gradually it was applied to hoisting cranes by a very natural process of metonymy. The word appears only in American dictionaries.

For the parting hour draws nigh,
And regreiful tears will blind me
As I pause to say "Good-bye."
Chorus.—Though my prayer at morn, etc.

Though my way be dull and dreary,
Love my guiding star shall be;
And I never can grow weary
While in dreams thy face I see.
Sweet and tender words are spoken
That shall keep me pure and strong;
And the vow that binds the broken,
Though I may be absent long.
Chorus.—This my prayer at morn, etc.

Promise, love, that you'll remember,
Promise, love, that you'll be true,
Though you reach life's gray November
Ere its days again I view and hail
To the dear place where we parted,
When my dreams are all fulfilled,
Like a glad bird, happy-hearted,
I shall come your nest to build.
Chorus.—This my prayer at morn, etc.

THE TWO ORPHANS.
Duet.

TO MISS "DELTA GONZALES" AND THE MIDGET "LOLO,"
BY WILL E. HARLAND.

A sad and solemn time has come,
My gentle sister dear,
For we are now compelled to roam,
Since poverty is near;
And if we cannot meet a friend
To ease our sore distress,
Our life's career will quickly end,
And God alone will bless.
Chorus.—Though poor, in the street a friend we may meet
While passing this wide world along;
Two orphans we are, sad fortune to share,
And that is inscribed in our song.

GIRL.

Oh, yes, dear brother, hard it seems
That we are so forlorn;
No loving parent o'er us dreams,
But fortune frowns with scorn.
Still while we beg, from street to street,
And hope to find relief,
Perchance a noble heart we'll meet
To sooth our sad, sad grief.
Chorus.—Though poor, in the street, etc.

BOY.

Well, come, dear sister, let us sing,
For plaintive is my heart,
And, though our voices faintly ring,
We cannot, cannot part.
We travel through the Winter's gloom,
And breathe out many a sigh,
Still onward we are forced to roam
Till some kind friend draws nigh.
Chorus.—Though poor, in the street, etc.

GIRL.

I cannot, brother, here refrain
From speaking of our woe;
For through the Winter's snow and rain
We've wandered to and fro;
But though the clouds around are dark,
The sun is bright behind,
And we perceive a brilliant spark—
The solace of mankind.
Chorus.—Though poor, in the street, etc.

CATHERINE HAYES
In Toronto, Ont., in 1852.

W. C. Turner sends us a programme given by Catherine Hayes as above stated. Miss Hayes died in Sydenham, Eng., Aug. 11, 1861; Joseph Kyle the flute-player died in this city, Nov. 27, 1863. The other artists, we believe, returned to Europe.

MISS CATHERINE HAYES
would respectfully announce that she will give A GRAND CONCERT,
assisted by
HERR MENGIS, MR. KYLE,

Tickets, $2; 1st, $1; 2d, 50c. They may be procured at Nordheimer's Music-store, where a Diagram, with the seats numbered, may be seen.

Doors open at 7 o'clock; to commence at 8 precisely.

LEARNING MUSIC.
BY JOHN T. BUTLERIDGE.

Commence now, on the leger-line—
There, just below the staff—
And run the scale clear up to C—
Oh, you're not trying half.
Place your hands now just like mine,
And use them just like that—
Gracious me! Look at you now!
What makes your head so flat?

TEACHER.

Well, if I "take" the leger-line,
And run the scale to C,
I'll know that I have run a scale,
But won't know in what key;
I hate this old piano,
I'd rather play a harp;
Pray tell me now what key this is,
You know that I'm not sharp.

TEACHER.

Can't you C that this here space
Is just above line B?
And then, without a flat or sharp,
It makes the natural key;
A baby ought to understand,
It's plain as it can B,
That when you have a white-key scale
The key is run to C.

SCHOLAR.

Now if this key is natural, pray,
How is it I am flat.
Since C has neither flats nor sharps,
Pray will you explain that?
(Teacher stuck, and so am I.)

COMPLIMENTARY BENEFIT
to Mrs. Maeder at the Park Theatre, New York, in 1841.

Miss Clara Fisher, who was married to James G. Maeder, a distinguished musician, on Dec. 6, 1834, was, in her youth, one of the most popular actresses that ever graced the American stage, and now, in the decline of life, is one of the best impersonators of old women before the public. At the period whereof we write, her ample earnings, during many years of incessant labor, had been nearly swept away by the revulsion of the times, and a committee of ladies got up for her a complimentary benefit, which netted a very handsome sum of money. The prices were raised to $2 for the boxes, and $1 for the pit, and $500 were paid for the use of the theatre, etc. It is believed that this was the first complimentary benefit ever offered to any lady in this country. Mr. George P. Elder of this city contributes an advertisement of this benefit, cut from a local journal of the period, a copy of which is annexed. Thomas S. Hamblin died in this city Jan. 8, 1853; W. E. Burton also died here Feb 9, 1860; W. H. Latham died in 1844; W. H. Williams returned to London, Eng., and died there Oct. 29, 1846, and was buried in Pentonville Chapel, where his remains lie between those of Tom Pitt and Joe Grimaldi; W. S. Fredericks is living in retirement; W. B. Blake died in Boston, Mass., April 22, 1863; Thomas Barry also died there Feb. 11, 1876; we have no record of Mrs. Seymour's death; Charlotte Cushman died in Boston, Mass., Feb. 18, 1876; Mrs. Vernon died in this city June 4, 1869; Mrs. Frederick Wheatley died here July 18, 1872; Mrs. Thomas Barry died here Feb. 20, 1854; Miss Mary Taylor died in New York Nov. 10, 1866; Mrs. C. E. Horn is now Mrs. Zust, and is living in this city; Mrs. Theodore Bailey died in Phil his second safely. Mack then fouled out, and, on Cuthbert's hit to Hallinan, Dehlman was put out at third, Nichols handling the ball very prettily from Hallinan. Cuthbert then ran to second, but this time Hicks threw swift and straight to Hallinan, who handled the ball in splendid style, Cuthbert being out, and the inning closed. It was pretty fielding all round. In the sixth inning, after the Mutes had drawn their sixth blank, Clapp led off with a two-baser, but the next three kept him at second by hitting high fly-balls, Treacy making a beautiful running catch of Battin's long ball to left field. In the seventh inning the Mutuals were disposed of in regular order by three of the prettiest catches of the day. Start opened with an apparently safe ball to short left field, but Battin got under the ball well. Then Treacy tried to get one out of Cuthbert's reach, but it was no use, the ball being finely held on the run. Hallinan—"ye heavy batter of ye nine"—now came to the rescue, and Bradley gave him "a nice one, you know," and away the ball went to the right field, where, apparently, it belonged, for Blong got hold of it handsomely. Hallinan hit heavyily and hard at the ball eight times in the two games, and five times he gave chances for catches, and three times so as to admit of his being fielded out, he making but one base-hit in eight times at the bat, and that only after he had been missed on a foul-ball. So much for heavy batting.

Nothing special was done on either side after this until the ninth inning. Up to this time the St. Louis nine had fielded without marring their record by a single error, not a ball passing Clapp on which a base was run, and not a life being given at any point by any error. The play of the St. Louis nine in their fielding was almost perfection, every position being played in a masterly style. On the Mutual side, too, save the three important errors in the third and fourth innings, their play was excellent, especially that of Treacy, Nichols and Hallinan.

Hicks, too, caught in better style, and Craver did not muff a ball, though he had some hot ones sent to him. In the ninth inning, however, both sides went in for a little muffing, though no runs resulted from it. The Mutual play in this inning was very exciting, and but for the nerve of the St. Louis nine, which kept them from being "rattled"—as the saying is—by the batting "streak" the Mutes got in, the latter would probably have won the game. The way of it was this. Holdsworth opened with a safe ball to right field, after Nichols had been well caught by McGeary. Then Start hit a beautiful grounder over second base—two men on earned bases and no one out. Treacy now came in to do something, and he hit high and short towards second. Bradley went and Anson second, with no one out; but Bond's effective delivery prevented runs from being scored. McVey striking out, Spalding flying out to Mills, and Addy fouling out to Allison.

LOUISVILLE vs. ATHLETIC.

These nines met for the first time on Tuesday, May 23, in Philadelphia, Pa., the pleasant weather attracting about fifteen hundred spectators, considerable interest being manifested on account of eleven out of the eighteen players being "natives and to the manner born." The Athletics had strengthened their nine by the engagement of Zettlein and Malone to alternate in the pitcher's and catcher's positions with Knight and Coons, but were weakened on this occasion by Sutton being made to play, and this caused several change in their positions, and militated materially against them. The game was one marked by a low score. This was not on account of sharp fielding, but owing to the weak batting of the two nines, especially that of the Athletics, who certainly never appeared to less advantage in this important department of the game. Devlin's very swift and effective pitching proved to be the great "stumbling-block" in the path of the Athletics, they being only able to make a couple of "scratch" hits off him, and in fact hit only one ball outside of the infield, and that was caught on the fly by Ryan, the other two outfielders having absolutely nothing to do. A miss on strikes by Malone, followed by a safe hit by Gerhardt and a wild pitch that Malone failed to field in very quickly, gave the Louisvilles a run in the first inning, and each inning by Hague and Devlin, and slow throwing by Malone, allowed them another run in the sixth inning, while Fulmer's fine two-base hit and Meyerle's error gave them their third and last run in the seventh inning. In these seven innings but three of the Athletics reached first-base, and these by errors only, safe hits by Hall and Force and a rather wide throw by Fulmer giving them the much-coveted run, however, in the eighth inning.

HARVARD vs. BOSTON.

Dick McBride made his first appearance on a ball-field, in his old position, since last Autumn, on Monday afternoon, May 22, at Boston, Mass., when a practice game was played by the Reds and the Harvards, the object being to give Mac needed practice for the contest with the Cincinnatis on the 25th succeeding day. He pitched for the first five innings, and, when it is known that the Collegians punished him for nine singles and one three-baser, our readers will understand how rusty he had become. During the closing four innings Josephs handled the ball in such style that the Harvards couldn't add to their score, and made but one base-hit off him. He made an unfortunate error while at centre field, however, muffing a fly and allowing two men to score. This was the only fumbling, and, immediately after Dorr error, McBride made a wild pitch, which let in a couple more runs, and then failed to hold a ball thrown him by Morrill, allowing still another man to score. These, with an earned run off a three-base hit by Fowler, and a single by Thayer, gave Harvard six runs in the inning, and a total of seven—all they got in the game. Murnan's safe batting and fine base-running were the feature of the game.

BATES vs. BOWDOIN.

At Lewiston, Me., May 20, was played one of the best games of the season, between the Bates College nine of Lewiston and the Bowdoin College nine of Brunswick. The game throughout was characterized by sharp playing on both sides, and was won by the Bates by superior batting. The catching of Record, for Bates, compared well with any of the professionals', and the pitching of Oakes was very effective, only two base-hits being obtained on it. The pitching of Payson was good, and the only weak point in the Bowdoin nine was the catcher. This was the best game ever played in Maine, and played as quickly as any of the games this year. Score:

ONEIDA vs. LIVE OAK.

An interesting game was played at Sea Cliff, L. I., May 20, the contesting clubs being the Oneidas of Glen Cove and the Live Oaks of Roslyn. Game was called at 3.05 P. M. by Chas. T. Duryea of the Brooklyn Websters, with the Oneidas at bat, when they quickly retired for a blank. By errors the Live Oaks secured four runs in their first inning. The next three innings the Oneidas were treated to goose-eggs, and the Live Oaks the same. In the fifth, the Oneidas by good batting, assisted by the error of Wansley, scored five runs, three of which were earned. In the sixth inning they added two more, and retired the Live Oaks for a blank. In the seventh inning the Oneidas secured one run, while in a good hit by Craft the Live Oaks secured a two. In the eighth inning the Oneidas scored one and the Live Oaks "nix," as did both nines in the ninth.

CHICAGO vs. NEW HAVEN.

The one-sided character of the game between these clubs at New Haven, Ct., May 24, does not warrant us in giving more than the score. It is claimed that the umpire originally selected gave glaringly wrong decisions in the third and eighth innings, and the expressions of disapprobation indulged in by the crowd caused him to retire at the latter stage of the game, T. B. Jewett taking his place.

RHODE ISLAND vs. TAUNTON.

The Taunton (Mass.) Club took a jaunt to Providence on May 22, and, being unable to get on to Cricketley's pitching, while the Rhode Islanders knocked Waterman's balls about in an alarming manner, they suffered a rather bad reverse. Carpenter relieved Waterman during the three closing innings, and the change proved judicious, as the Providences made a run in the first inning, and each inning by Hague and Devlin, and slow throwing by Malone, allowed them another run in the sixth inning, while Fulmer's fine two-base hit and Meyerle's error gave them their third and last run in the seventh inning. In these seven innings but three of the Athletics reached first-base, and these by errors only, safe hits by Hall and Force and a rather wide throw by Fulmer giving them the much-coveted run, however, in the eighth inning.

THERE WERE LETTERS in Detroit (Mich.) Post-office on May 25, for Gen. Hall, show "bit" (2); Mr. Cole, of Cole's Circus; Harry Robinson, of Robinson's Minstrels; J. W. Conns, of Minger's Opera Co.; John Hamilton, of Forepaugh's Circus; and Minnie Meyer, of Mathew's Opera Co.

INTRODUCTORY OVERTURE.

MONDAY, May 29, '76.

In the near future looms up the leafy month of June, fragrant with the sweet scent of roses, whose budding beauties, now developing toward maturity, light up the scene with brilliant colors and paint the landscape o'er. May has not met our expectations; she has been as fickle as April, as blustering and stormy as March, as cold as November, and as hot as sultry days in July. In fact, the weather has been considerably mixed during the merry, merry month of May, and dissatisfaction has found expression in the grumbling of the best society and in the growling of the worst. And yet vegetation is looking up, and the prospect of good crops is very encouraging. But while corn is forcing itself out of the ground, and strawberries are ripening "in the noonday glare," the potato-bug is preparing for its annual raid, and the sinuous mosquito is germinating in the corrugating wavelets of the rain-hogshead. But avast there—or, at least, heave to; for we are no tillers of the soil, nor drawers of water. ...Theatrical weather, what of the night? Are the signs favorable for the Thespian, or shall grim despair follow his footsteps throughout the Summer solstice? Verily, his has been a hard lot during the past year; and the manager, in a general sense, has not salted down many ducats or rix guilders, neither has the record of his year's gross to gigantic proportions as the result of his "indefatigable exertions." And yet, with the experience of past seasons before them, there are managers bold enough to threaten to run it through on this line if it takes all Summer. The outcroppings of the Centennial have not cropped out to the advantage of the poor player, and the coming months will not, it is feared, reward the laborer in the theatrical vineyard. Nay, the flagging times of Summer are upon us, when the footlights glare with malignant heat in the face of the playful toiler, and an air of listlessness begins to pervade the atmosphere of the auditorium. Yes, it is the time when the obliging usher runs for ice-water, refreshments and loons, and steals thence to the lobbies; the time when the weary habitue bethinks himself of the cosy nooks and favorite pillars of the marble halls, and the whiffs of the entr'acte cigarette are redolent and poetic in the nostrils of the smoker. The melancholy bouquet-boy lurks wofully in the breezy lobby with his unsold flowers, May Day ballet reign is over, and the horticultural madness is cured. ...Charley Thorne," as his friends call him, had a grand reception on the occasion of his benefit at the Union-square Theatre on Thursday afternoon, May 25, when the fair sex and the unfair sex turned out in their strength, and made the benefit a benefit indeed. "The Hunchback" was presented, and the manner in which it was acted was no pull-back in the cast, albeit there was no dearth of pull-backs in front. Jimmy, is the poetic machine in tune to-day? "She is jist luvly." Can she be depended upon to do justice to Sir Charles, who did such ample justice to Sir Thomas? "She kin rake 'em down every time." Is she properly greased? "I gross her urly this mornin', several pf 'pure continyude lines on the playside banks of the rippling Skoolkill." There, there; that will do—start h r

THE FLOWERY SEASON.

As sure as you are born.

.....As a sort of relief to the dramatic element which holds the legitimate boards, Messrs. Howes & Cushing, circus-proprietors, have presented the free and independent citizens of New York with a series of those classic exercises, or exhibitions of physical strength, skill and dexterity, such as were wont to entertain the noble Roman in past ages. Our representative athletes are James Mace and Joseph Goss, whose "assaults at arms" "length and scientific negotiations have held in breathless wonder the myriad of spectators who have taken in the situation. To give still greater zest to these gladiatorial displays, Professor Miller and John Dwyer have been induced to exhibit their prowess in a series of Greco-Roman wrestling bouts, which have "elicited high encomiums from the elite and fashion of society." Novelty is the order of the Centennial season. What with these athletic exhibitions, the "coach-driving" of the artistic Kane, the horseback shinny of the Polo performers, the ground and lofty tumbling of Offenbach, the equally astonishing tumble some operatic entrepeneurs have been guilty of, and the undulating eccentricities of the season generally, to leave out of consideration the many allurements of the Centennial, surely we have much to be thankful for, much to cause us to turn our thoughts from the grovelling things of earth, and lift us above the common rabble of society....This flight of fancy has startled James, who fancied that our forte "lied in another direction," as he expresses it; and, were it not that we know Jimmy to be free from guile, we should imagine that the youth emphasized the word italicized. Our touching allusion to turning the thoughts upward induced James to cast his eye in the direction of the dark and beautiful blue of the spacious firmament above, and we believed him to be studying the stars and the mysterious movements of the meteors and things that shoot from pole to pole; but his mind was not there; he was not thinking of the twinkling stars, nor was he dwelling on the face of the moon, nor on the constellations that held him captive; and when he had descended from his high estate, and again began to grovel, this is what he said: "Did you ever notice how closely the roof of THE CLIPPER Building resembles that of the Capitol at Washington?" No, we have not noticed it. "Well, it's so; because its wrote under.".....As we inwardly muse on the beauties of nature and the expulsion of Brother Bowen from Plymouth Church, Lancaster's snap comes to mind as the fledgling author saunters by. His trade with Manager A. M. Palmer of a certain commodity not supposed to be plentiful with managers, in exchange for an article of necessity never plentiful with journalists, is the talk of the sanctum, and the author's success is the envy of the intellectual department of every paper. "Here, in cool grot," we will his us to some friendly nook, and compose ourself to the pleasant task of composing a

HAPPY THOUGHT.

At Union-square things strangely stand—
The situation's funny;
A manager's got a "Conscience," and
An author's got some money.

.....He said he had just returned from Philadelphia, and he had his show with him—it was a living skeleton, and he wanted us to buy it. He looked like a man who had seen better days, and his show had a mysterious air about it that made him feel that he managed to bounce the town, and to get away by the skin of his teeth. He said that if he had stopped there much longer his living skeleton would have been a dead skeleton, and the latter's looks did not belie the words. He says that the show business in the Quaker City is greatly depressed; that there are as many managers there as there are inhabitants; that they would have made out very well if the Centennial Commission hadn't got up the pious discussion about opening the exhibition on Sunday. When they shut pan on the Sunday trade, everything fell flat, and the people went to church instead of viewing the anatomical marvels of the living skeleton. Dull men were in the city in the stress for want of proper nourishment; learned seals refused to "tell all they knew," and died in that embarrassing condition; a live gorilla, who had done the State some service, and whose playful pranks made children very happy, so soon as he heard about closing the exhibition on Sunday, began to droop and pine away, and he was sorry to say, having outlived his usefulness. We told the man we were not buying living skeletons now; but we thought he might induce the college students to take it off his hands by offering them a bonus. He went away somewhat angry, while the show was in no better mood.....And, talking about dreary things, Duncan's Opera-house in Philadelphia is soon to be closed; go to the Southern States a great deal. Sotsern states that he doesn't care much for them.....There is no dancing at the dramatic agency on Union square, but you might occasionally observe Wall sing there. Jimmy, in the recollection of happy hours passed in the old place, says you'll never see a poor "DAN" sing at the Twenty-third-street Opera-house again.....Doud Byron isn't the only man likely to achieve fame by his going nightly "Across the Continent;" for the managers of Booth's Theatre propose placing "Julius Cæsar" on the track, after running it so long by the stage line. "Julius" is to be railroaded out of town, and across the continent, during the current week. A great venture, and an expensive one; but Jarrett & Palmer have the secret of turning into money whatever they touch. Bear with us while we give force and substance to the occasion in sweet and tender verse:

Jarrett & Palmer should happy be—
In what they venture they've good stock.
They never lose, though "oft at sea;"
And e'en they get on swimmingly
When they're aground on the Rock.
But now, at last, they're not content,
Though there's no sign of failing—
They're going to cross the continent,
Successfully railing!

.....Crime is certainly on the increase. We have become hardened to cases of murder, and we are callous as to the frivolities of the mischievous garroter; we pity the poor burglar for the dangers he has passed, and we witness the imprisonment of the unfortunate crooked-whiskey dealer without the shedding of a single tear. All these are matters of history, to be continued; but what shall we say of that perfidious monster who, lost to all sense of decency, shame, and humanity, forges tickets of admission to the theatre? The infamous work of such a cumberer of the ground has just been discovered, and some of his handiwork has come to light in the Bowery Theatre, where the forged tickets passing strange in these days of moral reform and investigating committees? Alas! we go deeper and deeper every day. [No, James; we do not mean that kind of depth. Five fingers deep may do for you, Jimmy, but not any of it in ours.—ED.]..... What do musicians like best? Ha! ha! money, of course; though operatic managers get a very little of it nowadays—[ED.] and talking about harmony, how natural it is that musical sharps should go to Boston via Lynn! .....A new American comedy-drama, by Bret Harte is announced as in preparation at one of our city theatres. Now, we wonder whether this is not our old friend, Mr. Stephen Chinese. John Chinese is turning up everywhere. [Jimmy kindly endorses what we assert by remarking that he saw him turning up at the circus the other night.—ED.] ....."An Anxious Inquirer" is respectfully informed that Barnum has not engaged Fitzhugh to be doorkeeper for his show, Fitz's little peculiarities at the Washington monument being too innocent to be in accordance with Barnum's ideas of justice and morality. So it is not at all likely that Fitzhugh, although he has the reputation of being "a biger man than ole Grant," can ring in as doorman with any of the legitimate showmen.....See how thoughtful Kelly & Leon are. In order to make patrons of their Twenty-third-street Opera-house cool and comfortable, they provide ice and fans, free to all. This is not an isolated case of their liberality.....The thump of the bass drum [Why, no; we're not speaking of either bass or drum fish, although our subject is a scaly one.—ED.] and the throbbing of bassoons come down on the night-air from Gilmore's Garden, and our hearts rejoice therein when we take into consideration the fact that fifty cents will take you in. In this connection we propose to give you some pleasure at the expense of the great operabouffist:

Offenbach of memory sweet—
Melodic in his prime—
Comes to us only on the beat!
He beats poor Father Time!

.....In last week's Introductory, presided over by "Our Jim" during our temporary absence necessitated by "indisposition," may be remember, the Jim boy made some strange allusion to Dr. Landis' performance of Hamlet. Not wishing to be placed in a false position by the eccentricities of James, the doctor has sent the following epistle to St. James the less, which we publish against the remonstrances of Jimmy:

PHILADELPHIA, May 24, 1876.

DEAR JIM.—You are a "wag" to say that my respectful auditors at the "Brucklin Acaddermy" threw stools and furniture at me while I played Hamlet there with my "Imaginary Company." You ought to be much ashamed of yourself to tell those little ones: in fact, I think you ought to be choked to death for your attempts upon innocent actors, and more innocent auditors. I will confidentially whisper a secret into your ear, being sure you won't divulge it. Here it is: You know people nowadays are not any too smart to comprehend new departures, and when I did "Hamlet" solitary and alone, I saw at once that you—yes, you, Mr. Jim—and your "convivial spirits" were entirely too stupid to either appreciate or understand my lofty innovations; and I also saw you get red mad in the face, because my "Imaginary Company" took the attention of the elite portion of the crowd, which alarmed you and your companions, who would lose situations if my "alone business" were a success; hence you howled, guyed and snickered until the three hundred and sixty dead-head Academy stockholders threatened to break your heads should you continue your noise. This caused you to slink into silence; and for this reason you said that "stools, furniture," and such were thrown at me, which was in your "mind's eye," Mr. Jim. Next time when you say something, say out boldly and truthfully like a man, and do not swagger so in your remarks as if you had the "jim-jams." I am going to do "Hamlet" soon in three different ways, which will give you an opportunity to spread yourself. In the meantime, dear Jim, I forgive you. Thine, S. M. LANDIS, M. D.

[Our boy requests us to ask of the public a suspension of opinion or of the doctor, he is not particular which.—ED.]

CITY SUMMARY.

THE OCCIDENTALS, a band of trained Indians, under the management of Capt. C. E. S. McDonald, are expected to arrive in this city about June 26 from San Francisco, Cal.

J. F. SWEENEY sailed for England in the steamship Bothnia on May 24.

GEORGE C. BONIFACE is to be the star this week at Wood's Museum, acting in "A Life's Revenge." It will be his first appearance in this city in four years. "The Mysterious Woman" to be given at the matinees.

HENRY HEMON is to have a matinee benefit at Booth's Theatre on Thursday next.

STEPHEN FISKE, the business-manager of the Fifth-avenue Theatre, is to receive a benefit on June 3, when John Brougham and W. S. Davidge are to appear in "The Siamese Twins," and Miss Fanny Davenport is to act From Frou in the piece of that name. Both pieces in this city. She will also act the title-role in "Jenny Lind," in which James Lewis will impersonate Granby Gag. The San Francisco Minstrels and the Madrigal Boys will furnish a musical entertainment, and Sol. Smith Russell will give his specialties.

LAWRENCE BARRETT is to have a matinee-benefit at Booth's Theatre on Saturday, May 27, when he will act the title-character in "David Garrick;" E. L. Davenport, Charles R. Thorne Jr., Joseph E. Wheelock, and Miss Sara Jewett will perform the fourth act of "The Merchant of Venice," and Stuart Robson will be seen in a comic piece.

HENRY BRYANT and Harry Taylor are the reinforcements at Tony Pastor's Theatre this week.

THE BRIAN FAMILY—J. F. and the Misses Marian and Isabel—and the "Comte de Cagliostro," all of whom have just arrived from Europe, will appear at the Globe Theatre May 29. Henrietta Mollenhauer is to reappear.

LOTTA, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Fred Marsden, has gone to Newport, R. I., where she will pass the Summer.

H. J. MONTAGUE is to have a benefit at the Union-square Theatre Monday afternoon, June 5, when a comedy in three acts entitled "Queen Mab" will be acted for the first time in America, and "A Sheep in Wolf's Clothing" will fill out the bill.

AT THE OLYMPIC THEATRE Pat Rooney is to appear May 29, and the Girards are to give a new grotesque dance entitled "The Fee Jee Flutterers." An extra matinee is announced for May 30—Decoration Day.

CHARLES R. THORNE JR. received a benefit at the Union-square Theatre on Thursday afternoon, May 25, when, in the presence of an audience largely composed of ladies, which filled the auditorium, "The Hunchback" was performed, with the following cast: Master Walter, Frederick Robinson; Sir Thomas Clifford, C. R. Thorne Jr.; Modus, Stuart Robson; Lord Tinsel, Claude Burroughs; Fathom, Vining Bowers; Master Wilford, W. H. Montgomery; Master Hartwell, T. E. Morris; Gaylove, John Mathews; Thomas, Alfred Becke; Stephen, W. H. Wilder; Holdwell, W. S. Quigley; Servant, Edgar B. Moore; Julia, Miss Ida Jeffries; Helen, Miss Ida Vernon. "Conscience" was acted during the week, and on Friday evening Mrs. Marie Wilkins had a benefit, when her friends rallied in force.

MISS EVA WEST was the only new appearance at the Globe Theatre on May 22. Endowed by nature with a bounty of charms and features, these attractions were enhanced by a rich and tasteful toilet and graceful demeanor. In singing popular songs of the day she at once enlisted the sympathy of her auditors, and frequent recalls attested her success. Her voice—anxious to compete openly with artists upon the operatic stage by giving these burlesques in "white faces." They made the trial. The attendance rapidly fell off, and speedily the managers became bankrupt. Upon the very spot where this failure was made the San Francisco Minstrels, some years later, achieved a large and lucrative success, and gained both fame and fortune. The season which is now drawing to a close has been a prosperous one, considering the dullness of the times. The company will perform for a single week in the Brooklyn Theatre, commencing June 5, and then may possibly go to Boston, Mass., for a brief season, after which they will take a vacation, and reopen for the season of 1876-7 early in August. The only changes in the programme the past week were the singing of "Will you Love Me when I'm Old?" by W. Raymond, and the revival of the burlesque of "Julius the Snoozer." J. A. Barney was unable to appear during the week, on account of an attack of rheumatism.

ADAM RICHMOND, Lizzie Kelsey, Nellie Allen and Harry Allen began engagements at Wood's Museum May 22, acting in a burlesque entitled "The Fair One With the Blonde Wig," which ran during the week, and was preceded by the farce of "Bamboozling" until Thursday evening, when the latter gave place to a drama entitled "The Murder on the Mount." Miss Mamie French made her first appearance at this theatre May 22, acting Count Palaver in the burlesque quite satisfactorily. At the matinees the stock company acted in "The Skeleton Witness."

BOOTH'S THEATRE was reopened May 22, when "Julius Cæsar" was revived and performed during the week. The theatre will remain closed until the afternoon of May 31, when Lawrence Barrett will receive a benefit, prior to his departure for San Francisco, Cal., on Jarrett & Palmer's fast railroad express, leaving Jersey City, N. J., at one o'clock A. M., June 1.

MISS MARIE STELLA, a daughter of George C. Boniface, is to make her first appearance in this city at Wood's Museum June 5, acting in Gilbert's comedy of "Sweethearts" and in "David Garrick," her father acting the title-role in the latter.

MARTIN W. CHEATHAM, business-manager of Harrigan & Hart's Combination, called at THE CLIPPER office on May 29. He reports that the tour through the country has been successful, and even more profitable than was anticipated at the outset.

TWO WHITE WHALES are en route to this city. They will be exhibited in the new Aquarium now being built by C. Coup at the corner of Broadway and Thirty-fifth street.

THE REGULAR SEASON at the Union-square Theatre is to close June 10.

W. A. HUNTER, the treasurer of the San Francisco Minstrels, is to have a benefit on Friday evening next. He has been courteous and obliging to the patrons of the house and faithful to the interests of his employers, and therefore deserves a good attendance.

COL. T. ALLSTON BROWN advertises that he is prepared to arrange dates for Lizzie Walton in her equestrian dramas, and Tommy Brooks in his Irish specialties.

ACCIDENT TO A TRAPEZE PERFORMER.—Mrs. LERAUX, who has frequently performed under the professional title of Mlle. Emoclew, met with a terrible accident while performing in Howes & Cushing's Circus at the matinee on May 27. She closes her performance on the high trapeze with a most perilous feat. As she sits upon the bar the trapeze is given way to by means of Lady's hands, she touches the canvas which forms the top of the tent. She then throws herself backward, utters a slight scream, and just as the spectators think that she is about to be precipitated to the earth, she catches the ropes, by which the trapeze bar is suspended, by her feet, and, hanging head downward, swings to and fro. On the occasion above referred to, as she had thrown herself backward, uttered a scream, and to enhance the excitement the base drummer had given his instrument a powerful thump, one of the ropes supporting the trapeze bar broke, while the apparatus was nearly at its highest altitude, and the performer was dashed to the ground, falling a nearly fatal distance. A safety net was held by four men beneath the trapeze; but they lacked the firmness to properly retain it in position, and the falling lady tore it from their grasp. She was removed in an unconscious condition, and after an examination a physician stated that, although no bones were broken, she had received internal injuries which will preclude her performing again for some months. This afternoon, May 29, a message was sent us stating that she was improving.

THE ORRIN BROTHERS and Scanlon and Cronin left the city May 27 for San Francisco, Cal., where they are to play in Maguire's New Theatre.

HOWARD PAUL arrived from England in the steamship Celtic on May 28.

LUCIEN MARC and William J. Austin, who gave exhibitions of Greco-Roman wrestling, were the only fresh people at the Parisian Varieties the past week. The members of the regular company were seen in their specialties. This week the company will include Mlle. Bertha, Signor Novesino, Mlle. Leonia, Senor St. Claire, Emily Prior, Minnie Hall, Blanche Elberts, Minnie Harrison, Frank Henry, Andy Scott, Frank Steele, John Wooster, George Atkins, William Wilson, John Francis, Horace Weston, and Agethern and Adams.

MRS. W. G. JONES is to be the star at the Bowery Theatre this week.

THE GARNELLA BROTHERS sailed for Europe May 26 in the steamship Queen.

ZEKE CHAMBERLAIN, the chief doorkeeper at the Union-square Theatre, is to have a matinee benefit on Thursday next.

MRS. OATES' OPERA COMPANY are not to fulfill their engagement at the Park Theatre, in this city, commencing June 12. Although printing had arrived at the theatre from the troupe, a subsequent telegram from Colonel Mathen Chinese, Jr., of Jonestown turning up everywhere. [Jimmy kindly endorses what we assert by remarking that he saw him turning up at the circus the other night.—ED.] .....

MISS ELLA WESNER did not sail for England in the steamship Scotia on May 17, as announced in our past issue, but did sail in the Bothnia on May 24. The first-named steamship being overcrowded, she was transferred to the latter.

TIM HAYES, the well-known clog-dancer, called at THE CLIPPER office during the past week. He has just recovered from a long and dangerous illness, and informs us that he intends making a tour West and South.

EFFIE GERMON is seriously ill with pneumonia.

E. H. STEPHENS of the Academy of Music, New Orleans, La., arrived in town during the past week.

EUGENE, the well-known female impersonator, and John Unsworth are to sail in the steamship Abyssinia May 31 for England for a short visit. Eugene returns about Aug. 1 to rejoin Carncross & Dixey's Minstrels, Philadelphia.

THE SUMMER SEASON, with reduced prices of admission, as stated in our past issue, was inaugurated at the Park Theatre on May 22 by the production of "Our Jim" during our temporary absence necessitated by "indisposition," and may remember, the Jim boy made some strange allusion to Dr. Landis' performance of Hamlet. Not wishing to be placed in a false position by the eccentricities of James, the doctor has sent the following epistle to St. James the less, which we publish against the remonstrances of Jimmy:

THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, St. John, N. B., was opened for the season May 18, under the management of William Nannary, "The Wife" and "Lend Me Five Shillings" being the bill. The company and officers are as follows: Frank Roche, W. H. Southard, B. H. Graham, W. F. O'wen, L. W. Harris, J. F. Dean, Sol. Smith, Joseph Keane, C. W. Vance, Fred Nannary, Leslie Edmunds, H. Harwood, Sedley Brown, Walter Allen, George LeForest, Geo. Hooper; Mrs. D. R. Allen, Mrs. Sol. Smith, Miss Julia Dean Hanchett, Miss Belle Bailey, Miss Fannie Lee, Miss Emma Clifford, Miss Georgie Wilson, Miss Charlotte Neville, Miss Sothern, and during the season Miss Gertrude Kellogg and J. W. Ledgar. The scenic artist is R. P. Farren; stage-manager, Charles J. Fyffe; leader of orchestra, F. Heinold; master of properties, Charles LeForest; machinist, F. Dorman.

THE CLARA WILDMAN COMEDY COMPANY did not collapse in Muskegon, Mich., as has been reported. They reorganized there for the Summer season, and during the past week appeared in Ludington, Mich. They are billed in Manistee for 29, 30, 31, thence into the Lake Superior region. The company now includes Clara and Fred Wildman, H. L. Davis, J. W. Fox, F. Kendrick, Little Ollie, Frank Smith, Mrs. J. W. Fox, and the Misses Kate Collins, Sadie Norton and Jessie Morgan. The business-agent is C. A. H. Hatch.

"GRIZZLY ADAMS," a sensational border drama, in which E. T. Goodrich and Al S. Lipman have appeared with marked success, is favorably noticed by Indianapolis, Ind., Journals, as will be seen by extracts in another column.

ED. DILLON, walking gent or juveniles, advertises that he can be engaged for next season.

FRANK ANTHES advertises for an engagement with a dramatic company to learn the business.

THE WIFE of Harley Merry, the scenic artist of the Chestnut-street Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., presented him with a daughter on May 21, in Flatbush, L. I.

JOHN W. BURTON, comedian, publishes his address in our business department.

HARRY BLAKE, leading or heavies, advertises his permanent address in another column.

MISS BELLA FARREY, an actress lately with Campbell's Combination, traveling through Canada, died at London, Ont., May 19, of inflammation of the bowels.

"OTTO AND LOTTEN," a sensational drama, with star parts for soubrette and comedian, is offered for sale by E. E. Kidder, who advertises.

GEO. F. KETCHUM, first low comedy and eccentric business, is open for engagements through Simmonds & Wall, as per card.

AT THE BROOKLYN THEATRE "Brass" was the attraction the past week. Messrs. Shook & Palmer placed the play upon this stage with every required completeness of detail. The cast, besides the star, numbered five of the leading ones of the original assignment, yet the piece fell flat. Nothing but the vivaciousness and ease of Miss Rose Wood, and the general excellence of Messrs. Morrison, Bowers, Searle, and Langley, united to the earnest efforts of the regular company, saved the production from being a complete fiasco. The engagement cannot be classed as either an artistic or a pecuniary success. This week the regular season will terminate, the attraction being Lester Wallack, with H. J. Montague, and nearly his entire company, in "London Assurance" and "How She Loves Him;" to be followed on June 5 by the San Francisco Minstrels, under Birch, Wambold & Backus, for a week or more, if business warrants. The attaches of this house are down for a benefit on June 12. The benefit of Edwin Arnott on May

AT THE ADELPHI, Toledo, O., May 22, the new appearances were Mrs Miss Ida Maussey, who appeared in fancy dances; Blanche Porter, a young lady who made her debut in ballad—she possesses an excellent voice, a pleasing face and figure, is a good dresser, and only needs to study style; Andy Morris, an old favorite and a good clown; and Fred and Annie McAvoy. The latter two were to have appeared on May 22, but did not arrive in time. On Thursday they met with a good reception. Closing 27 are Waters and Kelley, Jennie Eagan, and Josie Farron, to Chicago; Blanche Porter, to Detroit; and Rose Doyle. Opening 29: Andy and Annie Hughes, the Barlow Bros., Lou Sanford, Altie Hallett, Ella Stowe, Lew Hallett, and Chas. H. McCaslin.....At the Theatre Comique the new faces May 22 were Murphy and Mack, who made a big hit in their Irish acts; Gussie McCabe, in songs, and John Dark, bellringer, who was withdrawn. A number of others were billed, but disappointed. No closures 27. To open 29: Lotha Weber and Emma Roberts. Letter of May 27.

THE ATTENDANCE noticeably increased at the Theatre Comique, Providence, R. I., the past week. The new attractions were Burt Watson, a clever comedian; Pell and Lewis, who are as good song-and-dance men as have been seen here for some time; Nelly Abbott, a pleasing balladist; and Prof. Arnold's Classic Tableaux. The attractiveness of the latter was doubtless the cause of the increase of the receipts. The departures May 27 were Guy Linton and Lucy Adams, to Boston; Burt Watson and Pell and Lewis. The following are announced for May 29: Dan Thompson, Julia Wilson, Billy Turner, Lizzie Turner, and Phil Heath.....Harris and Carroll have left the Howard & Carl "Black Crook" Company, and arrived here last week. They open a Summer resort on Narragansett Bay shortly. Advices of May 28.

AT THE COMIQUE SUMMER THEATRE, Washington, D. C., the attendance was large during the past week. There were no new arrivals. Miss Angie Schott produced her burlesque of "The Little Bo-panza," meeting with success. Will. H. Morton in his motto songs is very popular. Last Saturday evening he was presented with a handsome cane by Stage-manager Budd, on behalf of the members of the Neptune Club. The departures May 27 were Minnie Clayton, Homer and Holly, the Lawrence Sisters, Angie Schott, Nellie St. John and John D. Griffin. The announcements for May 29 are W. A. Huntley, Mariequeta Phillips, Minnie Gray, the La Rue Family, Thatcher and Hume and Dan Sutton. Advices of May 29.

MR. GUS. of Goss and Fox remains sick in Troy, N. Y., and Fox has gone home to Little Falls to await his partner's recovery.

THE NEW FACES at Smith's Opera-house, Grand Rapids, Mich., May 22 were Armstrong and Petrie, who do a first-class song-and-dance; and Mlle. Estelle, whose vocal efforts please. The departures 27 were Frank and Carrie La Varnie and Mlle. Estelle, to St. Louis; and Will. H. Vane, to Chicago. The stage-management has passed into the hands of B. S. Hodges, H. W. Eagan going to Cleveland. Fred Roberts opened 26. Business good.

OWING TO THE ELECTION EXCITEMENT, business at the Theatre Comique, Richmond, Va., was only fair the past week. Jessie Howard and the Leslies—Nellie and Charles—were the new faces May 22. Emma Bretts is announced for May 29.

MINNIE PALMER, a young and pretty little actress, has been playing at the Howard Athenæum, Boston, Mass., in the farce of "The Little Rebel," the title of which she changes to "Home from School." She sings nicely, dances neatly, and has made quite a success. N. C. Goodwin Jr. has appeared in support as Stephen Popincourt, and, although a trifle amateurish in his acting, he fully made up for it by his eccentric and exceedingly comical dancing. He also appeared in the sketch of "His First Rehearsal," introducing imitations of a number of well-known actors. Frank Cushman followed as an aged negro in plantation refrains, and Quilter and Goldrich sang and danced "O Peter, You're in Luck This Morning," and one or two other songs-and-dances. Pat Rooney in his Hibernian budget, and Dan Thompson as Joshua Whitcombe closed the entertainment. Next week will be the last of the season, which closes June 3, and the following artists will appear: Seamon and Somers, the Leotards, John Wild, Larry Tooley, James Bradley, Carrie and Charlie Austin, Lena Rivers, Bennett and Kernell, Goodwin, Miss Palmer, and Harry Bloodgood. On June 5 Haverly's Minstrels open the Summer season.....Buckley and Turner were the only fresh appearances at the Boylston Museum. Letter dated May 27.

CINCINNATI VARIETY NEWS to May 26 is sent as appended by our correspondent: "The new appearances on the 22d at the National Theatre Comique were Cincinnatus, song-and-dance man, who has before been here this season; Searles, Cummings, Beggs and Hynes, the four eccentrics, who took well in an illustration of life on the Mississippi; Master Haney, a clever song-and-dance midget; Sid. A. Vance and Nellie Fleming in an Irish drama called 'Rory Na Bouchal.' The piece is said to have been performed for the first time. It illustrates the perils of Irish peasant life in 1798, is well filled with humor and sentiment, has a lively dialogue and some strong situations. Sid. A. Vance appeared as Rory O'Rourke and Miss Fleming as Norah O'Brien, the Irish boy and girl of the piece, and both evince talent which only needs practice to ripen. The part of Sergeant Bluff was made very funny by Charles McDonald. The other characters were tolerably rendered by the company. Besides the new people mentioned, a number of ladies figured as living statuary, and a minstrel first part was given, with Johnny Shay, Lew Clapp, Frank Cummings and Cincinnatus on the ends. Attendance very fair. Departures 27: Mons. and Mme. D'Omer, to Louisville; Charley Gardner, Philadelphia; Lizzie Latour, with Blakely's Circus; and Clara Angelo. Announced for 29: Morris and Fields, Pete Cannon, Gussy Luando, Nellie Henderson, Dollie Whitman, and M. D. Lacy. Manager James Douglass of this theatre has been ill of late, and has gone to the suburbs to encamp.....At the Eldorado Theatre Comique the company this week consists of Mabel Gray, Ida Myers, Mlle. Bertha, Billy Maloney, William Bryant, M. A. Griffin, and Carr and Barton. Business fair.....R. Kramer, proprietor of Star Hall, whose arrest for selling Sunday performances was mentioned last week, was convicted and fined in a small amount on the 26th. The performers were discharged."

THE CLAIRE SISTERS, Fields and Hoey, and Master Tommy Fish were the fresh attractions introduced at Trimble's Varieties Theatre, Pittsburg, Pa., on May 22, and our correspondent, under date of 26, says: "The Claire Sisters were up to their usual standard of excellence in the several acts they presented. 'Music Conquered,' by Messrs. Fields and Hoey, was very acceptably given, and the merriment manifested by the audience proved that their performances were appreciated. Master Tommy Fish's cornet-solos were of a high order of merit, when the age of the performer is considered. The Female Minstrels are continued, with Billy Sharp now on the bone-end and Wm. Huntley as interlocutor. On the 25th two pugilists were seen in a friendly set-to, and retained as extra attraction for the rest of the week. Closing 27: Tommy Fish, Winnetts, Love Sisters, William Huntley, Conway and Korrigan. Joe Lang opens at Shelby's, Buffalo, on June 12. B. C. Hart, who has been running Trimble's Varieties for two or three weeks, informs me that he will relinquish the management of this place on the 27th, and open the Opera-house for at least one week on May 29, with a portion of his present company, in conjunction with the Phoites, Eloise Allen, Letha Webber, and J. Z. Little in the drama of 'Roving Jack.'"

SHERIDAN & MACK'S COMBINATION appear at the Portland, Me., Museum, June 1, 2, 3.

THE GUY FAMILY performed in Belchertown, Mass., May 24, 25.

E. HEATH, band-leader, with twenty years' experience, can be engaged. See advertisement.

THE RICHMOND SISTERS, song-and-dance artists, can be addressed at the Grand Central Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.

DAVIS & Co., whose cards find in another column, want to engage variety performers, and are prepared to rent the Grand Opera-house, Cincinnati, O., for short terms during the Summer season.

THE ATHENÆUM, Columbus, O., has once more succumbed to the combined influences of bad management and poor business, having closed its doors May 20 after a fitful existence of two weeks.

THE CLARK BROTHERS in their specialty of "The Hungarian Musicians" and Charles Diamond in songs-and-dances were the new faces at the New National Theatre, Philadelphia, during the past week. The other novelty was the concluding drama of "Valley Forge," with E. T. Stetson and Miss Marian Somers in the leading characters. Miss Eloise Allen and Harry Bryant closed May 27. This establishment has made a reduction in prices, commencing May 29, on which date will appear Miss Mollie Wilson, Miss Annie Hall, Kelly and Ryan, Harry G. Richmond, and Charles H. Morton, who will perform in his drama of "The Poor and Proud of Philadelphia."

THE VARIETY SEASON at Concert Hall, Philadelphia, under the management of G. W. Pike, came to a premature close on May 27. J. C. Noonan has leased this establishment, and purposes reopening it on May 29 with a company including Ernest and Gerard Byne, Miss Annie Hindle, Miss Madelaine Hardy, and Fostelle.

AT THE GRAND CENTRAL, Philadelphia, the new appearances on May 22, were the Lenton Family in a novel and excellent acrobatic act, the Reynolds Bros. in their neatly executed songs-and-dances, and Sam Devere in his banjo-solos, all being well received. The drama of "The Trail of the Serpent" concluded a lengthy programme, and favorably introduced Jacques Kruger in the role of Squire David Cornell. Baby McDonald and James McDonald closed on May 27. On May 29, D. L. Morris, the Lawrence Sisters, Miss Nully Pieris, and the Richmond Sisters are announced to open.

MISS MINNIE DE KALB, Add Ringler and Prof. Basa were the new faces at Miller's Garden Theatre, Philadelphia, on May 22, the attendance continuing excellent. The Victorelli Family, Miss Annie Braddon, Mlle. Marrietta, Miss Virginia Townsend and Harry Hall open on May 29.

MISS AMANDA LEE, well known as a clever vocalist, danseuse, and song-and-dance lady, has been for the last six months lying seriously ill of consumption at the residence of her sister, No. 1,137 Fairmount avenue, Philadelphia. As her long illness has left her in rather needy circumstances, a complimentary benefit is spoken of at some one of the variety theatres in that city, when her numerous friends will, by their attendance, prove that "a friend in need is a friend indeed."

AT NOONAN'S VARIETIES, Philadelphia, the attendance continued good during the past week. Miss Minnie St. Clair, Frank Raymond, and Tony Farrell open here on the 5th of June. Variety talent always wanted here.

THE EIGHTH-STREET SUMMER THEATRE, Philadelphia, was opened on the 26th of May under the management of Fred Rafner, and with the Wilmington Jubilee Singers and the Anglo-American Marionettes as the attractions.

THE WASHINGTON GARDEN, Casey's Varieties, Knocks' Varieties, and the Parisian Varieties are still open in Philadelphia, but business has been light at those, as well as at the more pretentious establishments.

NO NEW FACES were seen at the Comique, St. Louis, during the past week. The regular season closed May 27, and on the 28th Harry Noxon commenced the Summer with the following company: Bells Celeste and Frank Munroe, Carrie and Frank Lavarnie, Harry Kennedy, Fanny Montague, Allie La Monte, Johnson and Bruno, Otto Burbank, Sig. Tito Cellini and European Ballet. Dick Parker will act as stage-manager. The season will last five weeks. Lou Sanford goes to Toledo, O., 27; Ella Davis to Chicago, Ill.....Prof. De Bret, a passable sleight-of-hand performer, was the only new arrival at the Adelphi 22. Chas. L. Howard has taken charge of the stage, and he announces the following company for May 29: Hennessey Bros., Tom Murphy, J. C. Murphy, Chrissie Morrell, Harry Mendel, Barry Maxwell, Ida Fox, and Lizzie Rousselle. Crumley and De Forrest, Jennie White, Dollie Leland, and Prof. De Bret close 27.....Manager Mitchell of the Comique was to start for the East on May 28. He will return about the middle of July.

EMILY PAYTON, vocalist, can be addressed for engagements as per card.

TONY PASTOR'S COMBINATION performed in Rochester, N. Y., May 22, Buffalo 23, 24, 25, Cleveland, O., 26, 27.

HARRY LESLIE, "the Hero of Niagara," performed the past week in Carton's Varieties, Williamsburg, L. I., is to begin a two weeks' engagement at the Metropolitan Theatre, Newark, N. J., May 29, and opens at the new Third-avenue Theatre, in this city, June 3.

VARIETY PERFORMERS are wanted by John Shickling, who advertises.

GRAND CENTRAL THEATRE, Galveston, Texas, is announced to open about Oct. 1. At this new variety hall, now in course of construction, dates can be obtained by applying to the proprietors, Messrs. J. R. Halsey & Co., who advertise. A stage-manager is also wanted.

LEVANION BROS., gymnasts, publish a notice of their feats in mid-air in their card in another column.

MIKE LANGLEY, the manager of a variety theatre in Denison, Texas, on the night of May 20, during the performance, had some trouble with a man named Mac Gaffney, a brakesman on the Houston and Texas Central Railway. In the fracas Langley appears to have got the worst of it, and after it was over seemed to evince considerable feeling about it. Several persons in the audience were standing up, and he peremptorily ordered them to sit down. All save two policemen obeyed. Langley then ordered them to be seated, but they paid no attention to him. He then went behind his bar, got a double-barreled shot-gun, and went to the entrance-door of the auditorium, which he opened. At this juncture Mitchell, one of the policemen, fired at Langley with a six-shooter, one shot only, the ball taking effect, and Langley died the next morning at three o'clock. It is said that Langley has relatives in this city.

A PARTNER, with capital, is advertised for by Mlle. Ninon Duclos to take an interest in her troupe of female dancers, now exhibiting at Donnelly's Olympic Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.

FRANK MORIARTY, the stepfather of Thomas Williams, late manager of Ward's Opera-house, Paterson, N. J., also the husband of the lady professionally known as Lurline the Water Queen, died in New Haven, Ct., May 16. Mr. Moriarty was well known to many dramatic and circus professionals, who will be pained to hear of his death.

E. S. WASHBURN'S new Vaudeville Entertainment perform in Sing Sing, N. Y., May 29, White Plains 30, Norwalk June 1, Danbury 2, Ansonia 3, Yonkers, N. Y., open new opera-house, 5, Naugatuck 6, Wolcottville 7, Winsted 8. Business is reported good.

CONWAY & KERRIGAN, Irish dancers and specialty artists, open at the Coliseum, Chicago, Ill., May 29. They can be engaged through their agents, Sleeper & Thompson, as per card.

A NUMBER of ladies are wanted for Prof. Arnold's classic tableaux. See card. The company opened at the Theatre Comique, Providence, R. I., May 22, for four weeks.

AT GILMORE'S GARDEN THEATRE, Rochester, N. Y., Tom Haywood, Paddy Rielley, Gildsy and Draper, Millie Upton and Little Minnie closed on May 27. Opening on 29th are Ella Esmond, Maud Davenport, Tommy Morrissey and Billy Wild. Paddy and Nellie Hughes have closed, going to New York. Variety artists are wanted as per card.

THE NEW PEOPLE at the Odeon Variety Theatre, Newark, N. J., May 22 were the Ventini Troupe, the Richmond Sisters, the Murrays—Edward and Alice Rose—and the Bangert Brothers, who were announced, but were not on the bill, their business not suiting. The Richmond Sisters were seen to advantage in their songs-and-dances. The Irish musical sketches of the Murrays were well received, and were well worthy of the applause they elicited. Mons. Ventini and Mlle. Zuliella gave hat-spinning that was neatly done and applauded. The Richmond Sisters closed suddenly May 25, caused by a misunderstanding; the other closures 27 were the Murrays and John Manning, to New York, and Charles and Jessie Fox, who are to be tendered a benefit at the hands of "The Layfayette Sociale" at Oddfellows' Hall, on June 2. Announced for May 29: Healy and Conway and Ella Saunders, Johnny Reilly, Lou Edwards, Jennie Garcia and Signor Ermi. Business is improving.....At the Metropolitan, business has been very light all the past week, though the attractions offered ought to have drawn large houses. The new faces 22 were Annie Rochfort, Harry Fox and Frank Harrison, in sketches, and individually in specialties that pleased; the Garetta Troupe of globe-runners, including Ed. Monta. Mlle. Garetta and the midgets Young Apollo and Little Valentine in a very fine act, also Young Apollo in a trapeze act that was remarkable for one so young; and the Harcourts, in their lightning changes, each making four complete changes of costume on the stage before the audience, without adding to or throwing any of their costumes off, doing in turn solos or duets as the changes demanded, which were warmly encored. Closing May 27 were Kate and G. B. Harcourt, who go to Europe 30 or 31; Frank Gibbons, to New York; Ned Warner and Maud Stanley, who open at Williamsburg June 5. To open 29: Little Todd, Harry Leslie, Clifton Robbins, Geschwander and his Tyrolean Warblers, six in number. Advices of May 27.

AT THE METROPOLITAN, Indianapolis, Ind., the production of Edwin Goodrich's drama "Grizzly Adams" has attracted large houses, notwithstanding the opposition. The leading role of Grizzly Adams was finely rendered by Mr. Goodrich. The support is headed by Al. S. Lipman as Eddie Harris. This young actor is rapidly developing a talent that will place him in a higher sphere in his profession. The rest of the support is in good hands, including W. H. Schneider, Fred Harris, Miss Fannie Beane, Alice Kemp, Fannie Florance and others. The principal attractions of the olio are the specialties of the Morosco Brothers, Miss Frankie Lee, song-and-dances and Miss Alice Kemp's vocalisms. Next week Rollin Howard and Miss Nellie Larkelle return. Dated May 26.

NEGRO MINSTRELSY.

BILLY WELCH'S burlesque entitled "The Pennsylvania Coal-mines" constituted the chief feature of the programme presented by Simmons, Slocum & Sweatnam's Minstrels, Philadelphia, during the week ending May 27. A new burlesque, entitled "Uncle Rube's First Trip to the Exposition," is among the attractions for the current week.

CARNCROSS & DIXEY'S MINSTRELS will terminate their season at the Eleventh-street Opera-house, Philadelphia, on the 3d of June, reopening for the Fall and Winter season early in August.

THE NEW ORLEANS MINSTRELS, strengthened by an accession of ten new artists, will appear in Bath, N. Y., June 1, Danville 2, Genesee 3, Mount Morris 4, Leroy 7, Batavia 8, Warsaw 9, Attica 10.

FRANK DUMONT closes with Duprez & Benedict's Minstrels June 3. He can be addressed after that date as per card.

BILLY MANNING'S FUNERAL took place in Piqua, O., on the afternoon of May 20, from the residence of Richard Hudson, and his remains were deposited in Forest Hill Cemetery. The bottom of the grave was covered with Brussels carpet, and two flag-stones were placed upon the top of the coffin and cemented. The pallbearers were Alex. Henderson of The Cincinnati Times (the deceased's most intimate friend), George D. McKinney, R. S. Johnson, James Patterson, Wm. Kitchen, and L. N. Cannon. The funeral was largely attended by relatives and friends.

GEO. H. PRIMROSE of Primrose & West closed his engagement with Haverly's Minstrels May 26, on account of sickness, and left for his home in London, Ont., where he intends remaining until he has recovered. His partner remains with the company, and will work alone for the present.

AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Montreal, Canada, Duprez & Benedict's Minstrels have filled the house nightly. The whole performance was excellent, free from vulgarity, and brimful of wit.

DUPREZ & BENEDICT'S MINSTRELS were mulcted in the sum of $200, in favor of J. K. White of Cleveland, O., on May 26, in the Court of Common Pleas in that city. Mr. White's horse was frightened by the band of the minstrel troupe, while making a street parade there some time ago, and ran away and smashed things.

CALLENDER'S GEORGIA MINSTRELS were at Elmira, N. Y., May 25, and drew a good audience. A notable feature was the arrangement of the first part, this being the first time the performers were seated in a grove or lawn among trees and statuary. They made a fine appearance as compared with the old circle style. They are billed in Oswego, N. Y., May 29, Binghamton 30, Port Jervis 31, Newark, N. J., June 1, Paterson, N. J., 2.

HOOLEY'S MINSTRELS are reported as having done a good business in the new Chicago Theatre, Chicago, Ill., during the past week. W. B. Smith had a benefit May 21, and Billy Rice 26, both being well attended. Bobby Newcomb is to benefit May 31. Pat Rooney is announced for May 29. [He is extensively billed to appear in the Olympic Theatre in this city on the same date.—ED. CLIPPER.]

HAVERLY'S MINSTRELS are to occupy the boards of the Leland Opera-house, Albany, N. Y., June 2, 3.

CIRCUSES.

AMATEUR.

THE ST. EDWARD'S CLUB of Cincinnati played C. E. Newton's drama, "Cast upon the World," at Robinson's Opera-house, Cincinnati, O., May 25, before a crowded house. The piece was excellently rendered, and so evenly as to make particular praise unfair.

THE WHEATLEY DRAMATIC ASSOCIATION of Philadelphia produced "Caste" at their regular weekly performance on the 24th of May. "The Hidden Hand" will be produced May 31, the last night of the season. The Fall and Winter season will be inaugurated on the 6th of September.

FOREIGN SHOW NEWS.

DRAMATIC.

A NEW COMEDY called "Die Neuvermalten" ("The Young Couple") by the Norwegian author Bjoernstjoerne Bjoernson, was recently brought out at the Stadt Theatre, Vienna, Austria, and was well received. It is the story of a young wife, reluctant to leave her paternal home, and becoming only reconciled to her new position after a whole year's wedded life, and through the dance devotion of the husband. A new play, in four acts, "Timon of London," was in rehearsal, with the Dresden actor Dettmer in the principal part.

THE FOLLOWING HANDBILL was circulated in Preston, England, over Robert Taylor the tramp, and the suspected murderer of poor Emily Holland of Blackburn, will be on view at the Corn Exchange Assembly Rooms, Preston, from two o'clock to half-past nine P. M. this day, Wednesday, April 26. Taylor will be dressed in the clothes he was apprehended in. Go and see the innocent man, who, The Manchester Examiner of April 25 says, 'probably owes his escape from a critical position to the brute instinct which put to shame the sagacity of the police.' The proceeds, after paying expenses, will be given to the parents of Emily Holland. Admission threepence."

"WRINKLES" was withdrawn, after a brief existence, at the Prince of Wales Theatre, London, Eng., May 20, and successfully replaced by "Pour-boire."

MISS GENEVIEVE WARD made her first appearance at the Royal Amphitheatre, Liverpool, Eng., on the 8th ult., and her impersonation of Lady Macbeth and Lucrezia Borgia is greatly praised by the local critics.

J. B. HOWE was to sail from Southampton, Eng., for Cape Town, May 25, under a four months' star engagement.

T. C. KING made his first appearance in three years at the Queen's Theatre, Dublin, Ireland, May 22.

MRS. ANNE POWER, widow of the celebrated comedian Tyrone Power, who was lost with the ill-fated steamship President thirty-five years ago, died in London, Eng., May 7, aged 81.

Letter from South America.

MONTEVIDEO, S. A., April 18, 1876.

Schumann's Transatlantic Combination was performing in Buenos Ayres during the week commencing Jan. 13. They came from the interior, where they did well. We also visited Hadwin & Williams' circus in Buenos Ayres, an English company traveling through the River Plate Republics. The performance is held in a large, spacious building, the interior of which was very tastefully decorated. We saw them perform on Christmas-eve, but, although they gave an excellent entertainment, the house was very slim. They have quite a number of good lady riders, the Hadwin Brothers, grotesque clowns, and a young fellow who does the "Lu Lu Leap" very cleverly. The Passion Play is running to crowded houses in Rosario at present. It is called "The Seven Sorrows of Our Holy Lady, or the Trials and Tribulations of Our Saviour Jesus Christ," with the Spanish star Senor D. Francisco Rodriguez in the title role. The play is not produced in the same manner in Germany—as a religious feast and ceremony—but put on the boards of the Teato Olympo by a speculating manager, and cast among his own stock company. The opera-house is divided into eight parts, and consumes three hours and a half in representation; commencing with the Temple at Jerusalem, and closing with the Ascension. It requires a large force of auxiliaries in its production. Some of the tableaux were grand, especially the terribly life-like picture of the crucifixion. The Passion Play was first introduced by Catholic priests for the amusement of the people, and probably always will be played in Catholic countries. As we saw it represented it was certainly a very novel and impressive spectacle, and we shall long remember it. F. G. A.

SONGS OF THE DAY. Written to order by ARTHUR W. FRENCH,
10-4t Bridgeport, Ct.

A SURE DRAWING DRAMATIC CARD. POSITIVE SUCCESS EVERYWHERE. E. T. GOODRICH IN HIS OWN LIFELIKE CREATION OF GRIZZLY ADAMS (A Companion Picture to "Davy Crockett"), supported by the talented juvenile actor, MR. AL S. LIPMAN. "GRIZZLY ADAMS" is a Border Drama in three intensely interesting acts (playing one hour and thirty minutes), depicting scenes from the life and adventures of the greatest frontiersman and bear-fighter, J. C. ADAMS, long and favorably known throughout the United States. Sparkling Dialogue, Thrilling Situations, Brilliant Tableaux, introducing A GRAND ASSAULT-AT-ARMS and TERRIFIC KNIFE FIGHT, a play depending upon its dramatic merits, and NOT GUNPOWDER. BUT TWO SHOTS FIRED during the whole piece. ENDORSED THIS WEEK by the Indianapolis Press as follows: THE METROPOLITAN.—A large audience assembled at "The Old Drury" last night, to witness the presentation of the long-paraded "Grizzly Adams." It is of the sensational school, and, judging from the perfect storm of applause that greeted the climax, was well appreciated. Goodrich, as the old hunter and scout, was immense. His make-up and appearance gave every indication of the old, honest hunter, whose character he portrays so well—a man who would rather lose his own life than have it said that he ever deserted those whom he had sworn to protect. The play is replete with thrilling situations, and unlike other border dramas, the interest increases, instead of diminishing, as the finale draws near. Mr. Al Lipman as the head-strong Eddie Harris evinced considerable dramatic ability. The same bill will be repeated again to-night, and all who want to see one of the best border dramas ever produced at this popular place of amusement should not fail to be on hand.—SENTINEL, May 23. METROPOLITAN THEATRE.—The performance last evening at the Metropolitan was highly satisfactory to the audience present. The border play of "Grizzly Adams" abounds with thrilling situations, and is, in the main, a true portrait of frontier life. Goodrich, the old hunter, is the personification of a scout, and his climaxes never fail to bring down the house. Mr. Al Lipman as Harris displayed dramatic ability of no mean order, acting his part with much spirit.—JOURNAL, May 24. "GRIZZLY ADAMS."—The production of this border drama, which has been so long in preparation, will be hailed with pleasure by all the patrons of this theatre, and all lovers of this style of play. As indicated by the title, the drama is of the "thriller" order, and as a literary work it promises far more than average merit of plays of its class. Mr. Goodrich, in his specialty, "Grizzly Adams," is truly excellent, and received due recognition of his deserves. Al Lipman has more than fulfilled the prophecy we made concerning him, as his title to a place in the front rank of his profession is undisputed.—SENTINEL, May 25. 10-1t

Managers desiring time with the Oates Opera Company, address A. S. PENNOYER, Business-manager, care of HOOLEY'S THEATRE, CHICAGO, for the present. The company has been strengthened and improved, and is now the most complete organization of the kind ever in America. Dates are rapidly filling up, and early application is desirable.

High-class Stars, Opera Troupes and Combinations desiring dates at Baldwin's Academy of Music, San Francisco, either on share or certainty, address the manager, THOMAS MAGUIRE. As the Academy is THE theatre of San Francisco, and the most beautiful theatre in America, only the very best class of attractions will be treated with.

Hooley's Theatre, Chicago, is THE fashionable house, and most prosperous theatre in the West. As THE TRIBUNE recently remarked: "So good is the reputation of Hooley's Theatre, under its present energetic manager, that even a Punch-and-Judy show will doubtless draw a full house there the opening night." High-class Stars and Combinations desiring time in Chicago will consult their interests by applying to WILL E. CHAPMAN, Business-manager, before closing elsewhere.

For open dates and terms at Maguire's New Theatre or Maguire's Opera-house, San Francisco, write to J. H. HAVERLY, Manager, whose address will be Palace Hotel, San Francisco, Cal., until further notice. Star specialty artists and strong minstrel attractions will also please apply to Mr. Haverly.

Managers desiring time with Haverly's Minstrels, the only thoroughly first-class troupe which constantly travels, playing in the best theatres in all the largest cities, will address HARRY J. CLAPHAM, Manager, as per published route in THE CLIPPER or MERCURY weekly. 10-2t*
